AROUND THE COUNTY.

CLINTON.

George Hard is clerking for Randall & Kimball.

Benjamin Silvers, of Albion, is here visiting friends, and looking over the scenes of his boyhood days.

Mrs. G. W. Lewis is suffering from temporary abberation of mind.

H. C. Pope, late proprietor of the Clinton Exchange, concluded rather unceremoniously last Sunday afternoon to exchange this stopping place for some other, and very prudently kept his conclusion to himself until out of reach. His whereabouts are unknown.

The Referm Club exercises last Monday night consisted in having an old-fashioned spelling school. A large number participated and all unite in admiration of the change of program.

Miss Carl Corey, formerly a Clinton belle, but of late a resident of Paw Paw, is spending a few days in town this week.

A donation visit at the Baptist Parsonage last Thursday night put the minister in possession of a thousand dollar girl. Weight, ten pounds and a quarter. "Blessed is the man that has his quiver full of them."

Somewhat variable—the weather.

The most furious storm of wind and rain for years, occurred here on Sunday about four o'clock.

In the intense darkness of Sunday night, two young ladies stepped off the sidewalk between Dr. Alvord's and Frank Lancaster's. No serious injury resulted, although the fall is some four or five feet.

Charles Green, while returning home met a peddler's wagon; the wind raising some canvass attached to the wagon, his horse dodged into the ditch upsetting his buggy and breaking both shafts. No other damage.

Saturday three boys, Frank Roland, Richard Stringer and Fred Morey—boys from 9 to 12—being up the race, concluded to navigate a cake of ice back to the road. They manned their craft with great valor and launched out, elated as Columbus was when he started on his voyage of destiny. But at every curve of the channel crumb'd off some portions of the frail vessel. The boys began to feel a trifle shaky concerning their craft, when a lucky turn brought it near the shore, whereupon two of the mariners leaped for shore, the water was not over their heads and they reached land. When that side of the craft was relieved of the weight of the two boys the other side sank so that the remaining boy had to jump and swim to a stump, where he anchored to take observations. A man who was watching the proceedings unobserved by the boys, says the urchin on the stump made the atmosphere blue with his profanity. He finally pulled off coat and vest and swam ashore, pretty well cooled off. The boys declare their anxiety to navigate a cake of ice is entirely cured.

Died Jan. 6, 1880, in Wakeshmo, Mich., Mary A. Harland, aged nineteen years. Deceased was the daughter of James M. Harland, of Franklin, in this county. She was born in the same town of her death July 29, 1850. Mary formerly lived in Clinton, and at the time of her death was affianced to a promising young man.

Our dramatic club are going to act "The Last Loaf," on Friday evening of this week, and by special request they will render "The Fireman," on Saturday evening.

SPRINGVILLE.

Our singing school holds two nights in succession this week.

Our dentist, C. L. Vaughn, extracted twenty-two teeth for Mrs. George Daniels last Tuesday.

A donation was held at the Baptist church last Wednesday for the benefit of Rev. Mr. Holt.

A delegation attended the railroad meeting at Addison last Thursday, also at Franklin Center Tuesday evening.

Gone to Petoskey. It is reported here that Mrs. John Onsted packed her goods last Saturday morning and started for Petoskey.

The railroad committee of this township meet at the Cambridge Cheese Factory, Wednesday, Jan. 14th.

Five of our townsmen came down with maps & plans for the railroad, last Saturday.

At a short notice of about three hours last Friday, that a railroad meeting would be held at the Cambridge Cheese Factory, about two hundred and fifty persons gathered at that place. The meeting was opened by T. H. Mosher, the chairman. After making a few brief remarks, Mr. Mosher introduced Mr. Latcha, President of the proposed road. Mr. Latcha spoke about one hour [illegible] object of the proposed road, showing interest to the country through which it would pass as well as to the company. Also giving the difference in the cost of the proposed road and other roads in the State; showing that freight would be much cheaper on this road as it would be a competing road, making through connections from Milwaukee to the Eastern seaports. Mr. Latcha assures us that as soon as the required amount is raised we can secure the road. Now let every man come down. Remarks were made by quite a number from Cambridge, stating that they were greatly interested in the project, and that they would give money and the right of way. Mr. Kimball and Mr. Teachout spoke in behalf of Rome township. Mr. Hathaway represented Addison as doing all they could, and that they were meeting with good success so far.

EAST TECUMSEH.

The Literary Society were greeted with quite a full house Saturday evening, Jan. 10th, despite the very bad condition of the roads. GLEANINGS FROM THE COUNTY PRESS.

The Hudson Post has an Adrian correspondent.

The Blissfield cornet band are preparing for a masquerade early in February.

An inquisitive individual of Blissfield wants to know where the property of their Red Ribbon Club is, and wherefore the same is used by private persons for private purposes.

The Relief Committee appointed to disburse relief to the sufferers from the grand stand disaster, have made their report. The report shows that there was received from various sources, $1,917.24. The amount disbursed $1,938.17, which includes ice for Opera House and gas for hospital purposes, which amounted to $21.33, and was donated, but not included in the receipts.

Adrian Times: Among those most severely injured at the grand stand disaster was Mrs. Gates, of Morenci, who suffered a dislocation and fracture of the joint of the right hip. She received the care and attention of Prof. Maclean and Dr. Rynd at the time of the disaster, and the latter has been in attendance ever since. The accident occurred fourteen weeks ago last Thursday, and on Saturday last, for the first time, the bandages and other surgical appliances were taken off, and the patient used her disabled limb. With Dr. Rynd's assistance Mrs. Gates walked from her bed to a chair in a distant part of the room. The chances are excellent for her complete recovery of the full use of her limb.

A Terrible Fall.

Morenci Observer: We regret to chronicle a serious accident of which C. H. McKenzie, of Chesterfield, was the unfortunate victim. On Wednesday night or Thursday morning, Mr. M. awoke and his stomach feeling disordered he arose, going down stairs to quiet it by a dose of soda. Not long after returning to bed he had occasion to arise the second time, about half past two o'clock, and while going from one room to another, having to pass through a hall at the head of the stairs, being dizzy it is conjectured, he fell headlong with heavy force to the bottom. The family were at once aroused by the noise of his falling, and when he was lifted up was found to be entire senseless, while blood was issuing from his ear and nostrils. Neighbors and medical assistance were immediately dispatched for, and at the present writing his recovery from the terrible fall is considered rather doubtful.

A Pioneer Gone to Her Rest.

Adrian Press: Another of those noble pioneer women has gone to her rest. Mrs. Olive P. Carter, was born in 1808, in Richmond, Ontario county N. Y., and married Gardner Mason in 1830. They came to Michigan in 1840, and soon after settled in Ogden, where they lived until after the death of Mr. Mason. In 1868 she was married to Jared W. Carter, who died in 1876, since which she has resided with her son, John G. Mason, of this city. Aunt Olive Mason was one of those women who glorify their lives by their noble deeds and their womanly acts. She was ever a good Samaritan, comforting the sick and sympathizing with the afflicted, and was highly esteemed by all with whom she was acquainted. She was, for the last few weeks of her life a great sufferer, and received the unremitting care of her son, till death claimed her. The funeral occured Monday, Rev. Mr. Shepherd, of Tecumseh, officiating.

The Hudson Opera House.

The new Opera House at Hudson was formally dedicated last week. The Post gives a full account of the affair from which we gather what follows:

"Last Tuesday evening a large audience assembled at Fowl's new Opera House to witness the formal opening and dedication of the building. Below the house was densely packed, and in the gallery the inevitable small boy was out in full force, so much so, as to be a source of annoyance through the whole evening, as Hudson's small boys are not remarkable for orderly conduct at public meetings. The exercises of the evening were commenced a little before eight o'clock by the Opera House orchestra, consisting of the Dean Bros. and Will Hardy, of this village. These young gentlemen have in them the making of a first-class orchestra with a little practice, and even now they do finely. After a duet rendered by Misses Jennie and Jessie Turner, the address of welcome was given by Hon. J. K. Boies. Mr. Boies briefly reviewed the progress that had been made in this village during the past thirty-five years in the building of public halls, and made some very complimentary allusions to the new building as well as of the owner, Mr. Fowl. At the close of his address he called for Mr. Fowl, who came upon the stage. Mr. Boies, then in behalf of the business men of Hudson, presented him with an envelope containing $156 in money, the same being a donation to aid in paying for the gas-light fixtures for the house. During the evening the different scenes were displayed to the audience, which had a very pleasing effect, and were it not for two things, one of which was mentioned at the outset—the small boy—the other which we mention now, which was the sticky varnish on the chairs, making it very doubtful to some for a time whether it was best to leave a part of their clothing or take the chair home, there would have been nothing to mar the enjoyment of the evening.

Life Insurance.

Dr. Hause, at the time of the assault committed upon him last December, had a Policy of $1,000 in the Provident League of America. Under the terms of the policy he receives a weekly benefit of $20 per week. The first installment was paid Dec. 28th as the following letter shows:

TECUMSEH, M. Dec. 31, '79.

R. W. KASSAN, Asst. Sec. Provident League of America, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Yours of the 30th at hand containing $40 for two week's benefits which was due me the 28th. This is indeed a very prompt payment, more so than of any Insurance Company that has come to my knowledge, which speaks well for the promptness and business like management of the officers of the League. I shall ever be thankful that I joined the Provident League of America, and can sincerely recommend it to all who may desire a benefit in any organization. Very Respectfully,

DR. E. HAUSE.

The Doctor is 43 years of age, and joined the League Oct. 30; has a certificate for $1000 death benefit and $20 weekly benefit; cost him, cash, $24.44.

Mr. F. H. Burgess, the Michigan manager of this company will be in Tecumseh in a few days, at which time he expects to organize a division of the League here.

EDUCATIONAL TOPICS.

A PLEA FOR HIGHER EDUCATION.

The Literary and Professional Training of Teachers.

The following is a condensed report of a paper read by Prof. Z. C. Spencer, of Tecumseh, at the late meeting of the State Teachers' Association, at Lansing:

The purpose of this paper is to urge the necessity for higher literary and scientific knowledge and professional training for all licensed teachers.

I. The teacher is the soul of the school.—The untiring Numa Droz, late Secretary of the Interior, Switzerland, in a lengthy and very able report upon the schools of that republic to the High Federal Council, says: "It is simply impossible, no matter how excellent the system, to attain a satisfactory grade of instruction with indifferent teachers. It is from want of proper pedagogical training that so many defects have made themselves apparent in modern modes of instruction." He then very pointedly adds: "As is the teacher so will be the school."

Wise systems of education are of value; careful supervision is productive of excellent results; commodious and well ordered school buildings may contribute their share to the establishment of discipline; but, after all, it is the teacher that makes the school.

When the mill grinds badly, as Mr. Joseph Payne says, we cannot expect a good grist—the thing is an impossibility.

The teacher then being emphatically the main factor in the successful school he should have the best possible qualification for his work. It is now generally conceded that a familiarity with the subjects to be taught alone is not enough: a knowledge of method is also necessary: that the teacher who is well trained both in matter and method is the best instructor and accomplishes the greatest good.

The Greeks used to say, to become a successful man in any vocation, three things are needed: nature, study and practice. Thus to become a successful teacher, one must possess natural aptness, a good knowledge of subjects, and technical training. Natural aptness is either present or absent. It is a prerequisite over whose existence we have no control. We have to do only with study and practice. This leads me to

II. A higher literary standard for teachers.—Many advantages attend the possession of a thorough education in whatever business or profession it may be found. Prest. J. M. Gregory, in speaking under this head, says: "A sound and liberal education is the surest pathway to success in all pursuits. Statistics show that the educated man will, on the average, be as far advanced in his career at thirty-five years of age as the uneducated at forty-five or even fifty. Not one out of every ten of uneducated men achieves success." Our school law makes it obligatory for the teacher to have a knowledge of those subjects only in which he imparts daily instruction. To secure satisfactory results from teachers, as a class such knowledge is entirely inadequate. The truly successful teacher has a literary culture that is broader and deeper than this.

The whole work of education may be regarded as a great search after the truth. Viewed from this standpoint the quasi profession of teaching becomes a truly noble one. The teacher in the faithful discharge of his daily duties is guiding his pupils along the paths that conduct to the truth. The many departments of knowledge—of truth—are mutually dependent for their position, their teachings, and their usefulness. Algebra and geometry make plain the points that arithmetic failed to elucidate; Latin and Greek are mighty handmaids for the teacher of the English language; geology is a puzzle at times to him who knows not chemistry.

How then shall the teacher who is unacquainted with the easiest and pleasantest paths be able to conduct his charge to the goal most acceptably?

Some one has said, "The great sin of the day is the mutilation of truth." The unity of knowledge in all its beautiful and harmonious relations cannot be taught by the less educated. It is he who deals out knowledge by fragments, torn from their proper dependencies, and presented in illogical order. Carlyle writes: "Mind grows only by contact with living spirit and the quality of its growth depends upon the quality of spirit by which it is touched." It was the motto of Guizot that "every teacher should know far more than he will be called upon to teach; for the more he knows of everything the better he can teach anything."

But, in addition to these general thoughts, I would name more specifically the advantages attending the higher scholarship of teachers.

1. It is necessary for the best teaching. How often has this been demonstrated in our graded schools where teachers at work in adjoining rooms secure widely different results.

2. It enables the teacher to grasp improved methods with intelligence and to employ them with success. Valuable methods have been lost in a great measure, for years, because teachers possessed not the requisite scholarship to handle them. Many advances have failed in America because our teachers as a body are not qualified for their work. The facility with which improved systems and processes are taken up in Germany is due, we are assured, to the superior general and technical training of her teachers.

3. It facilitates correct instruction and accurate habits of thought and study. False habits contracted in the school room cling to us for years and are eradicated only after the most persistent effort; in the majority of instances they are not shaken off at all. As an illustration of faulty instruction I may cite the incorrect pronunciation of words. There are those who have spent hours—yes, weeks and months—in looking up the correct pronunciation of words they were allowed to miscall by uneducated teachers.

4. It counteracts the tendency to the employment of too young teachers. This defect is very generally recognized; some, indeed, have made a hobby of it and denounce the evil in the strongest terms. Supt. Philbrick declares, "We have too many young and inexperienced girls as teachers."

5. It is productive of great saving of time and labor, and therefore, is a valuable economist. Much might be submitted under this head. President Chadbourne, in his invaluable paper: "Waste of Labor in the Work of Education" has dealt upon this subject with great clearness.

6. It will render the country schools especially more effective. It is there that better work is demanded. The best men of the nation, it is shown by statistics, receive their earliest instruction in the country school house. This does not demonstrate that the best work is done there, as some would assert. Whether we shall explain the fact by saying that the youths of the country are more symmetrically developed by the more abundant exercise of the intellectual energies, constructiveness and judgment, and the simultaneous training of head and hand, or in some other way, is not for us now to speculate. But it does go to show that the State legislates unequally to the prejudice of the agricultural classes. It is an imperfection which it is quite possible for the farmers of the country to remove.

7. Higher scholarship for the teachers of Michigan is entirely practicable. Our many high schools furnish ample facility for the education of all who may apply at their doors.

8. Higher scholarship gives rise to better schools. In pursuance of the amended school acts of the neighboring Province of Ontario, for 1871, a higher literary standard for teachers was laid down than had previously existed. From that year down to the present time the rural schools of Ontario have rapidly improved. The estimation in which the amended act is held may be gathered from the following extracts from the Report of the Minister of Education for 1877. A county Inspector says: "Seven years have now elapsed since the great improvement was made in our school law." Another: "A few years previous to the passing of this act of 1871, the marvellous effects of which are truly startling to every thinking man, the educational affairs of the country had reached a low ebb." And a third says: "Long may the hearts of the illustrious educationists who matured and brought forward the amended act of 1871, continue to pulsate."

Candidates for certificates are required to pass two examinations; the non-professional and the professional.

9. Higher scholarship does not cut the supply of teachers too short; on the contrary, it has the effect of attracting more into the ranks. In 1871, in Ontario, 3,699 candidates applied for certificates; in 1877, six years after the passage of the amended act, the candidates numbered 6,288. We learn from the Circular of Information, No. 1, 1878, that in 1876 "there were 2,079 more students in training, in Germany, than in 1870, and the yearly increase in the number of those who devote themselves to the profession of teaching in the elementary schools is about 650 more each year now than it was then."

10. The introduction of a better educated teaching force into our schools is the surest guarantee of the future development and prosperity of the State.

III. A more uniform and rigid system of examinations.—To the establishment of such a standard of scholarship as has been advocated, should be added the adoption of some uniform system of examinations under competent examiners. This is one of the most imperative demands of our school plan. As these examinations are now conducted, they are, in many instances, of the most informal, undignified, and honorless character. The expression, "He passed the examination for a certificate," has come to possess a wide range of interpretation. It may indicate an honest test of hours' duration, or a ten minutes' chat across the fence.

IV. My next point is, professional training for all teachers.—Technical instruction can be had in only one of two ways: by systematic study and practice under skilled supervision, or by experiments and discoveries. The latter is attended with years of blundering and waste labor before the truth is found out. The training and instruction to be had in Universities and Normal and Training Schools is that which I wish to urge.

The schools cannot be raised to their highest degree of usefulness till only professionally trained teachers are employed. This plan of professional instruction, it is contended by some, can be carried into effect only in the larger cities and other educational centres. This matter of can and cannot is simply one of methods and means. In these days, a thing is impossible, either because we do not know how to do it or are unwilling to incur the expense. I trust it will not be without profit that we examine the training system in Ontario. Here it may be observed that it is not always practicable to introduce methods from Germany or England, or any other foreign country. Methods which are English cannot be fully incorporated into our system, since they are English and vice versa; yet useful lessons may be learned from an examination of school work under plans not our own; the tendency of the times and the bent of the educational thought of the world may be ascertained by such processes. For the following information I am further indebted to the report of the Minister of Education for 1877.

The amended regulations concerning Public School Teachers' Certificates, which came into force in August, 1877, provide that every applicant for a certificate shall have received professional training. The Normal schools at Toronto and Ottawa are now confined to teaching and training of candidates for first and second class certificates, while in each county of the Province one or more model schools have been established for the professional training of candidates for third class certificates. In the Normal schools the session for first class certificates extends throughout the academic year, and the instruction is literary and scientific and also professional; while for second class certificates the attendance is obligatory on all candidates during one of the three sessions. The whole time of each session is devoted exclusively to instruction in the theory and art of teaching. In the County Model schools the candidate who has passed the examination in the prescribed literary and scientific subjects for a third class certificate, is required to be instructed in the actual practice of teaching for one term at least and he must also satisfactorily pass this examination in order to attain his third class certificate. No candidates for third class certificates are admitted into the Normal schools.

How this regulation for securing professional instruction is received may be gathered from the following quotations from the reports of the County Inspectors.

"This Model school system is the best step toward educational improvement which could have been taken, inasmuch as it enables our third class teachers to acquire a good training before beginning to teach."

"The amended school act of 1877, renders our school system a model of completeness. Teaching is now fully recognized as an art requiring an apprenticeship, and the amateur who takes it up unconscious of its difficulties betrays his unfitness for the task."

Many other quotations might be added, endorsing the changes of 1877 as perhaps the most important acts of legislation in Ontario in connection with teaching.

In endeavoring to establish any important measure in civil institutions regard must be had, of course, to expense. Without a proper degree of economy any proposed radical change will most assuredly meet with opposition and, perhaps, overthrow. A comparison of the cost of our Institute system and that of the Training system of Ontario will be given.

According to the State Superintendent's report for 1878, $5,134 were expended upon the county Institutes. The enrolment numbered 2,852; 46 Institutes were held. The attendance did not average more than three days perhaps. The fifty county Model schools of Ontario for 1877 cost about $200 each, $100 being donated by the Government and $100 by the county; the total outlay being $10,000 or less. The attendance at these was eight weeks or longer. As to the actual results, no one will fail to appreciate them at once. While our institutes are undoubtedly doing a good work, the thought presents itself are the best possible fruits attending the expenditure of money? The benefit derived from an irresponsible attendance of three days at a county Institute will bear no comparison with the discipline of a term's work, in study and practice at a county Model school, with an examination at the close to test the student's proficiency.

V. Your attention is invited, in the fifth place, to a consideration of the signs of the times.—That higher academic preparation for the great body of teachers and professional training for all will be fixtures in the near future, is augured by the educational movements of the day. Chief among these may be numbered:

1. The establishment of Chairs of Education. The Commissioner of Education, in his report for 1877, gives a list of twenty German Universities in which pedagogy is taught by means of lectures. Chairs of Education are ably filled in the Universities of Edinburgh and Glasgow, and in the College of Preceptors, London. In this country, in addition to the Professorship in our own University, may be mentioned the Chair of Didactics in the State University of Iowa, and that of Pedagogics in Missouri University.

2. The conferring of Degrees of Education. Such degrees are granted by the University of London, the College of Preceptors of the same city, and several Colleges and Normal schools of the United States.

3. The almost exclusive employment of only professionally trained teachers in the larger graded schools.

4. The endeavor in some quarters to make the teacher's tenure of office permanent. The attempt recently made in Boston to bring this about, though abortive this time, may succeed some future day.

5. Higher scholarship is now demanded as a condition of entering many Normal schools. Those in Newark and St. Louis admit only graduates of the high schools or those of equivalent education. The majority of the city training schools now make the same condition.

6. The establishment of Normal and Training schools all over the civilized world.

7. The tendency at present manifesting itself toward professional work only in the Normal schools. Prof. W. F. Phelps at the last meeting of the National association said: "Normal schools should now devote their whole time to professional work." The Normal schools at Toronto and Ottawa, as we have seen, have embraced this movement. The Normal schools of New York do comparatively little academic work; as well as several training schools in Massachusetts.

8. Everything that looks to making teaching a profession is receiving careful thought.

9. The expression of public opinion. The last legislature of New York appointed a special committee to investigate and report whether the State Normal schools are fulfilling their original purpose. The committee included intelligent men who gave much time and attention to the matter. Their report is most flattering to the cause of education.

VI. Lastly, the inquiry meets us—What are the needs of the hour?

Our State University and High Schools have secured for this State a national reputation; it is to them mainly this good name is due. But, if we would retain this enviable position and secure to our children the blessings of the best instruction, it will not do to disregard the interests of primary education; nor can we stand still while the nations are going forward.

There is need of greater enlightenment of the people upon the educational problems of the day. Our citizens should be kept posted in the advances made in other States and in foreign countries. They should be made to understand clearly the points of inferiority as well as those of superiority in our State system as compared with systems elsewhere. Unless the educationists and the press, general and local, of the State furnish this information, it will not be had. The people do not seek it.

There is need on the part of education, of more zeal, of more planning, of more deliberation in meetings of congress.

But foremost among the needs of the hour is effective legislation. I remember that this is debatable ground and that it has been claimed our "public school system cannot advance beyond the public sentiment that sustains it;" yet, assuredly, it is the part of a wise government to lead the people. It is now generally conceded that when Herbert Spencer denied the "right of the State to administer education," he simply taught one of those fallacies to which even the greatest minds are liable. President John Bascom says: "If education under individual effort is incomplete in character, or partial in explication, the State, as holding the common resources and representing the common interests, ought at once and directly to correct so great an evil." Teaching will never approach to the dignity of a profession while it is made possible for all to teach. When an adequate standard of scholarship shall be laid down by legislative enactment, the first great step toward the teaching profession will have been taken. The people of this State have provided ample facilities for obtaining literary and scientific knowledge; but teachers as a body will never sufficiently avail themselves of these opportunities till compelled to do so by law. It is not the evidence of history that any people or class of individuals have progressed simply by a sort of voluntary interval development. Sir James Fitzjames Stephen, the eminent English jurist and statesman, says: "No period at which discussion takes the place of compulsion, has as yet been reached anywhere, and there is no prospect of its being reached anywhere within any assignable time."

A higher standard of general culture having been attained, the next step will be professional training for all teachers. This, too, will not become universal solely by making provisions for imposing it. It must be enforced by authority as a means to an end. The experience of our Normal schools may be cited in proof of these statements. They were created originally for the single purpose of furnishing professional instruction. But the Normal graduate met with discouragement and defeat. With his diploma of four years' apprenticeship in hand, he is taken in the race for a position by the certificated school-boy. In fact, except under appointive supervision, there is no demand for the Normal graduate. Consequently, the Normal schools have been obliged to take up academical work and have been largely perverted from their original purpose. The States have acted wisely in establishing Normal schools but unwisely in making their diplomas of no superior worth.

If the State would provide three Normal, and twenty-five county Model schools, to do only professional work, and let the problem solve itself by waiting for the demand for graduates to come from the people, the instructors would be chiefly busied in awaiting the arrival of pupils.

Let the State care on their statute books that a professional diploma is a prerequisite for every teacher and at once our Normal schools will be overtaxed with work, their true worth will be appreciated by the people and hostile criticism will become less active.

Just how these desirable advances will be brought out, we cannot now say; they are certainly correct in theory and, as has been shown, not impossible in practice.

Montreal Heard From.

R. L. Mosely, of Montreal, Canada, certified Sept. 27, 1879, that he had suffered terribly from dyspepsia, and was completely cured by taking Warner's Safe Bitters. He says: "My appetite is good, and I suffer no inconvenience from eating hearty meals." These Bitters are also a specific for all skin diseases.

ELI PERKINS ON CHILDREN.

To-day I sat in a car seat on the Lake Shore road, behind a pale, care-worn lady, who was taking a little boy from Cleveland to Ashtabula. As the little boy was of a very inquiring mind, and as everything seemed to attract his attention, I could not help listening to some of his questions.

"What is that, auntie?" the little boy commenced, pointing to a heap of yellow corn.

"Oh, that's corn, dear," answered the care-worn lady.

"What is corn, auntie?"

"Why, corn is corn, dear."

"But what is corn made of?"

"Why, corn is made out of dirt, and water, and air."

"Who makes it?"

"God makes it, dear."

"Does He make it in the daytime or in the night?"

"In both, dear?"

"And Sundays?"

"Yes, all the time."

"Ain't it wicked to make corn on Sunday, auntie?"

"Oh," I don't know. Do keep still, Freddy, that's a dear; auntie is tired."

After remaining quiet a moment, little Freddy broke out:

"Where do stars come from, auntie."

"I don't know; nobody knows."

"Did the moon lay 'em?"

"Yes, I guess so," replied the wicked lady.

"Can the moon lay eggs, too?"

"I suppose so. Don't bother me."

"A short silence, when Freddy broke out again:

"Fanny Mason says oxins is a owl, auntie; is they?"

"O, perhaps so!"

"I think a whale could lay eggs—don't you, auntie?"

"Oh, yes—I, guess so;" said the shameless woman.

"Did you ever see a whale on his nest?"

"O, I guess so."

"Where?"

"O, I don't know; do be still Freddy." And the lady gave a sigh as she looked out of the window.

A moment afterward Freddie looked out of the window and saw a man milking a cow.

"What is he doing to the cow, auntie?"

"Milking her, dear."

"Where do they put the milk in, auntie?"

"Oh! in her mouth."

"Did you ever see them put the milk in?"

"Oh, yes!"

"Where?"

"I mean no. Freddy, you must be quiet; I'm getting crazy!"

What makes you crazy, auntie?"

"O dear; you ask so many questions."

The little boy seemed to be puzzled and thoughtful a moment; but soon his curiosity got the better of him, and, as the cars passed a pasture in which were a sheep or a lamb, he asked:

"Where do lambs come from, auntie?"

"Oh! from old sheep. The old sheep has them."

"Can little boys have lambs?"

"Certainly. I'll let you have a lamb, Freddy, when you get home."

"Will it hurt me, Auntie?"

"What hurt you—the lamb?"

"No, will it hurt me to have it?"

"O Freddy, do stop! You ask such foolish questions. I'm all tired out."

"Did you ever have a lamb, auntie?"

"Freddy, stop! Don't you speak again for half an hour."

Then the poor worn-out woman sighed and leaned her aching head on the back of the forward seat, while Freddy busied himself placing his mouth against the window and soliloquized in a sing-song tone:

"Mary had a little lamb!

"Sheep had a little lamb!

"Auntie had a little lamb!"

"O, auntie! auntie!"

"What is it, Freddy?" asked the poor woman, waking up.

"Did you ever see a little fly eat sugar?"

"Freddy! sit down on that seat and be still or I'll shake you. I won't be tormented to death. Now, not another word," and the lady pointed her finger sharply at the little boy, as if she was going to stick it through him. If she had been a wicked man she would have sworn, and still, notwithstanding we have eight million little boys like Freddy in the United States, each one causing more or less profanity, the Y. M. C. A.'s throughout the country denounce Herod as a biased man when he ordered all the children killed—except his own.—Eli Perkins.

Poverty and Suffering.

"I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did them no good.—I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well and none of us have seen a sick day since, and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost—I know it.

OUR NEW DEPARTURE.

Improvement is the order of the day. Progress is the watchword. The business man who would succeed in trade must keep up with the march of events, must avail himself of all the new inventions and methods in his line of trade; the professional man must keep posted upon each forward movement in his special calling; the journalist must seize upon new ideas as they arise in catering to the public taste, and gratifying the public thirst for news.

Acting upon this principle we present the HERALD to our patrons this week in an improved and enlarged form. We have adopted the popular six-column quarto style, and the paper will now contain forty-eight columns, instead of thirty-six columns as heretofore, making a very liberal enlargement in the size of the sheet. The eight page plan will be a great improvement over the old style in two respects. First, it enables us to classify and systematize the reading matter to much better advantage.

Thus, on the first page will be found a collection of county news taken from our special correspondents and other sources. The second page will be devoted to the family circle—a good story and other general reading. This week we have a very excellent paper from Prof. Spencer, on the Training of Teachers. The third page will be devoted to the "Chip Basket." The fourth page will be given to editorial matter and home news. The fifth page will contain local news proper, special notices and business locals. The sixth page will have a carefully selected collection of State news and the Washington letter. The seventh will be the farmers' page and will be devoted to agricultural topics. And last but not least, the eighth page will contain additional local news, the market review, letter lists, marriages, and our illustrated department. This latter will be a permanent feature of the HERALD during 1880, and will add very much to the attractiveness of the paper.

The second advantage of the eight-page form is its convenience for the distribution of advertisements. Every page in the paper contains a liberal amount of reading matter and something which each reader wishes to peruse; and upon every page can be placed a few advertisements, in good position and well displayed. This will be a decided advantage to advertisers and one which they cannot fail to appreciate.

We have thus sketched the general plan of the paper as we design making it during the year. When we have a rush of local news, or something out of the ordinary line to report, the general plan will be modified to suit the emergency.

Many new names have been added to our subscription list during the past month, and the list is growing every week. With the improvement now made in the HERALD and the extra care and time which we design bestowing upon the editorial management, we feel assured that we can give satisfaction to all our old customers and gain many new patrons during this year of grace, 1880. We set out upon our year's journey with high hopes and full confidence of our successful voyage. To the many hundred subscribers of the HERALD in Northern Lenawee and elsewhere, we say: Hearty thanks for all past favors, gentlemen, and a respectful invitation that you shall weary not in well doing hereafter.

At the meeting of the State Press association, to be held at Ann Arbor on the 27th, papers will be read on "Dead beats"; "Wildcat newspapers"; "Newspapers and the law of libel"; "Early newspaper history of Detroit"; "Newspaper make-up," and other topics. Several interesting biographical sketches are also expected. The visit to the University city furthermore promises to give the editors a splendid opportunity of becoming personally acquainted with one another.

THE HERALD job rooms can now turn out more job printing in one week, can do better work at lower rates than ever before. As the holiday rush is now over we are prepared to do everything that comes on short notice.

THE NEW RAILROAD PROJECT.

What Has Been Done During the past Week—The Present Situation.

The work for the Toledo & Milwaukee Railroad is progressing favorably and seems to be gathering strength and momentum every day.

A public meeting was held at the Opera House in this village on Friday evening last, and although the weather was simply horrible and kept the farmers away still there was a good attendance of villagers, and the temper of the meeting was most favorable.

Mr. Perley Bills was chosen chairman of the meeting and Wm. DeMott acted as secretary.

S. C. Stacy was first introduced and made a short speech favoring the project and explained the nature of the local aid required and the manner in which it was asked for.

Mr. Latcha, the President of the road, and a delegation from Addison and Cambridge had driven through the mud from Addison that day, arriving in Tecumseh just at dark. Mr. Latcha was therefore present at the meeting, and he then proceeded to give the people a detailed statement of what he desired. He spoke of the favorable aspect of affairs at Toledo, and in fact all along the line. It was destined to be the most important line he had ever had anything to do with. Michigan, although a wealthy and populous State, is the worst supplied of any State with competing lines of railroad, and this will furnish a bona fide competing line. They wish to construct the most direct line between the two objective points, Toledo and Grand Haven, and at the same time touch good towns, which will insure a local traffic. If we secure the road Tecumseh will be on the line of a trunk road and be placed in direct connection with both Philadelphia and Baltimore, by means of the Penn. Central R. R., which can secure traffic better than any other road in the United States.

It will make the most direct railroad line between Tecumseh and the sea coast. Tecumseh would reap more benefit from this road than any town along the line, and with her splendid water power and other advantages it would add materially to her business prosperity.

Mr. Bills then called upon the business men present to express their views, and several of them responded.

Wm. Hayden urged the importance of the project and pledged liberal aid. N. M. Sutton, J. S. Strong, John A. Heck, J. P. Slayton and others, followed to the same effect.

A motion was thereupon carried instructing the canvassing committees, which had been previously appointed, to proceed at once with their canvass.

W. F. Baxter was called out and made a rousing speech, calling upon the young men to show their good will, and pledge their assistance on the spot. In response to this call a number of $100 subscriptions were handed in and before the meeting adjourned the total amount pledged had been raised to $5,300. The committees are at work this week and will continue the canvass vigorously.

On Tuesday evening another meeting was held at Franklin center. Tuttle's Hall was packed full, and our Franklin neighbors were waked up. The matter was presented to them in detail by Messers Hayden, W. F. Baxter and Stacy of Tecumseh, and the general feeling seemed to be decidedly in favor of going on with the work.

A meeting of their committee is called for next Friday evening, when they will proceed with a canvass.

To-morrow, Friday evening, a meeting will be held in the Culbertson School House, North-East of the village.

On Tuesday evening, of next week, a meeting is called to take place in the Tilton School House, in the town of Raisin. The farmers of the Northern part of Raisin are equally interested with those of Tecumseh in this matter and they are already moving to assist in the work.

In fact there is no class of people in the community more interested in increased railroad facilities than farmers. Competing railroads reduce the freight rates, and every dollar saved in transportation adds just so much to the price of the farmer's produce. A good competing line of railroad thro' Tecumseh would add a liberal percentage to the value of every farmer's products who makes his market at Tecumseh. Again, an increase in the population and business of Tecumseh will improve it as a home market for small fruits, vegetables, &c., and thus benefit every farmer who raises crops of this kind to sell. In short the interests of farmers and villagers are identical.....Improve the village and it will benefit the farmers. Help the farmers and it will add to the prosperity of the village.

Next Saturday afternoon at two o'clock a meeting will be held here to accommodate the farming community, and it is hoped that every farmer living within five miles of Tecumseh will make it a point to attend. Come out and hear what is said and see what your interests are.

AMONG OUR EXCHANGES.

The Presidential Slate.

New York Herald.—Democrats who are writing up the Presidential slate should put Horatio Seymour somewhere near the top. The old man is making cheese on his farm, but he could find time to be President, if he were coaxed just a mite.

Wait Till Cuba is Heard From.

Adrian Times.—It is remarkable how clearly some of the prominent leaders see that the Grant boom is fast waning. About the only trouble in the case is that if the boom had diminished as fast as these people say, it had ought to have totally disappeared long ago. Wait until Cuba is heard from and then predict.

Not a Fragile Flower.

New York Sun.—Mr. Blaine is not as young as he was. He has been sitting up late o' nights. The stupider Maine Republicans, who look to him in all emergencies, have made unusually heavy drafts upon his nervous energy this winter; it is not at all surprising that the strain should have begun to tell upon him. But the Hon. James G. Blaine is not a fragile flower.

The Good Deacon Richard Smith.

New York Sun.—The news that a Cincinnati Judge has dismissed the libel suit brought against Deacon Richard Smith will occasion rejoicing but not surprise. That truly good man is incapable of libelling anybody. All the improper and defamatory matter that appears in the Cincinnati Gazette is surreptitiously slipped in after he leaves the office by the wicked partners, who take an unholy delight in getting the truly good man into scrapes.

Another Zack Chandler Wanted.

Detroit Evening News.—The fusionists in Maine seem to be without a leader, and are permitting the days to slip by without finding means to give Maine a government and themselves power. How quickly such a man as the late Senator Chandler would have brought order out of the present chaos in Maine if he were at the head of the fusionists. They seem to have neither the moral courage to do full justice and give up the power they have fraudulently seized, nor to be thorough in usurpation, and cement and fortify it by completing their work.

The Grant Boom on the Wane.

Philadelphia Times.—A leading Ohio Republican, who was recently a candidate for Congress in that State, has been enquiring into the health of the Grant boom there. He finds it very feeble, and is satisfied that not only could Grant not carry the State, but that if he is nominated it will be lost to the Republicans at the October election on the State ticket. The Germans are almost unanimously against a third term, and so decidedly that way that in overwhelming numbers, it is believed, they would bolt his nomination. If this is the way things are going the little that may be left of the boom will have to be put into a small bottle and tightly corked to prevent its utter disappearance.

What Ails Senator Blaine.

Cincinnati Enquirer.—Hon. James G. Blaine is one of the most captivating men in American politics. His popularity comes from several States. He was born in Pennsylvania. He taught school in Kentucky. He went to Maine to edit. He has thus brought within the immediate reach of his splendid magnetism three great sections of the country—the border land, the Middle States and New England. Blaine is bold, brilliant, bewitching. He is really aggressive. His manner is seductively abrupt and frank. He has the faculty of drawing unto himself, by a warmth and cordiality of manner, even his opponents. He wins the devotion of young men. He attracts some of the admiration of older men. He is ambitious, exceedingly ambitious.

But he faints away.

Church Oyster Stews.

New York Herald.—At last the church oyster stew and its price have been mentioned in court to wit, in the course of the Hayden trial. A young man who was summoned as a witness in the Hayden trial had been at a church entertainment given by Pastor Hayden's church, and, like various other unwary youths, had ordered an oyster stew. Although cross-examination did not discover the exact ingredients and proportions of the dish there is no reason to doubt that the time-honored, orthodox church entertainment recipe had been followed, which same mixes three small oysters, three-quarters of a pint of warm water and a powdered cracker together, and makes fifty cents the minimum price. Young men occasionally wink at this style of extortion for the sake of winking at the pretty girl who usually serves the stew and collects the money; but there seem to have been no girls accompanying the refreshments on the occasion alluded to. The money was collected by the pastor; and who cares to spend fifty cents for three oysters and a chance to skylark with a preacher?

TESTIMONY

Of the Hon. Jos. E. Gray, Judge of the Superior Court, Chicago, Ill.

CHICAGO, Dec. 14, 1879.

DR. S. D. HOWE,

DEAR SIR:—Permit me to add my grateful testimony to the army of witnesses to the virtue of your justly celebrated Arabian remedies. For a long time my wife was seriously afflicted with hacking cough, oppressed breathing, soreness of the chest, and constant acute pain in the lower portion of the right lung and under the shoulder blade. Her sufferings were intense, and she became extremely nervous and prostrated. Her disease was pronounced consumption by the physicians of Chicago and other cities, whose prescriptions had been taken without benefit. When you visited Chicago in June, 1873, we called on you, having very little hope of deriving help from your treatment. We were inspired with hope by the skillful manner in which your thorough examination was conducted, and the satisfactory explanation with which you closed your diagnosis. My wife determined to take your medicines in accordance with your plan and practical directions. She began to use the Arabian Milk Cure and Arabian Tonic, their beneficial effect at once became manifest—the cough loosened and soon ceased, respiration became easy, the soreness of the chest was relieved and all pain removed, she began to gain in flesh and improve in strength and appearance. I fully believe that your medicines and skillful advice have saved the life of my wife. She unites with me in this grateful tribute to the merit of your remedies.

Very respectfully yours,
JOSEPH E. GRAY.

Card.

To the many kind friends who came through the darkness and thro' the mud to help us celebrate our 50th anniversary and left behind them so many "Golden" tokens of friendship and love we would return our most sincere thanks, assuring you that we do not appreciate them for the monied value they represent alone, but more as the outward promptings of your warm hearts. May a kind providence spare you all to celebrate your golden wedding and cause your hearts to rejoice as ours do is the wish of

MR. & MRS. EZRA F. BLOOD.

A Card of Thanksgiving.

To Almighty God for protection.—To fellow-beings for aid when in a helpless condition, and to those who as brothers, when the tide of my life was ebbing, watched with sleepless eyes through the longest nights in the year over me, thus through their tender care, together with the sympathy of kind friends I am raised from a horizontal to a perpendicular and placed on my feet, with my head again nearly level, am about ready, after over four weeks of confinement to go forth again to work for the good of others, but am one hand short.

E. HAUSE,

ONE thing traders, dealers and storekeepers generally ought to bear in mind, and it is that when money is being made is the time when it is spent, and the way for them to obtain their share of it is to advertise. To be silent these days is to be ignored. Let the public know what you have to sell, to cause them to head directly for your establishment before all others. There has not been such a time when advertising would surely pay such large returns since the war. Now is the time for those who have bargains and attractions to offer to herald them far and wide, and customers will flock in. Not to do so can only be compared to the farmer having great crops but neglecting to gather them in. There are to-day immense crops in the advertising columns of the papers for those who have the enterprise to gather them.—Ex.

THE gentlemanly clerk of the Pioneer Hotel Bucked against a Cra(i)g one evening last week, but luckily it did not hurt him much. Full particulars of the accident in our matrimonial column.

DAVE SILVERS, the popular clothier of Clinton, knows the benefits of advertising, and he shows his faith by a new card and locals in this week's HERALD.

THE suit of Slayton & Son vs. Jacob Cheever, which was tried a few weeks ago and resulted in a disagreement of the jury, is on trial the second time to-day.

DR. E. HAUSE came up town last Tuesday for the first time since the robbery. His hand was injured much worse than was at first supposed but it is improving rapidly.

THE T. & A. A. railroad are laying iron on the extension of the track North of Ann Arbor. It is expected that the cars will be running to Pontiac before Jan. 1st, 1881.

WE send sample copies of the HERALD this week to many of our friends who are not now taking the paper. We wish them to peruse it carefully and then favor us with a subscription for 1880.

HENRY HAINES has our thanks for a late copy of the Daily Chronicle, of London, England. It contains, among other interesting articles, a strong speech on the Free Trade question by Mr. John Bright.

THE preliminary arrangements are completed for a grand masque ball under the ausipces of the Base Ball Association to come off soon. The date is not yet fixed, but it will probably be the last week in January.

A DISTRICT telegraph has been organized in Clinton. A telegraph wire has been run from the depot to Freese's store and thence to two or three private houses in the village.—They find it a great convenience.

OUR friends are requested to bear in mind that items of local news must be handed in on Wednesday to insure an insertion the same week. Copy received as late as Thursday forenoon generally has to waste its sweetness in the copy drawer till the next week.

THERE will be a railroad meeting in this village next Saturday afternoon, at two o'clock, to accommodate the farmers who live in this section. Every farmer living within five miles of Tecumseh is respectfully invited and urgently requested to attend this meeting.

THE annual renting of the pews of the Baptist Church of this village will take place on Tuesday next, Jan. 20, at one o'clock, P. M. A full attendance of all who desire pews is earnestly desired, as the rentals will be absolute and the trustees do not wish to take the responsibility of reserving seats for any one.

EVERY man should settle up his accounts as early in the new year as possible, balance the books and begin anew. In order that we may accomplish this most desirable object we respectfully remind our friends that the rule ought to work both ways. We should be happy to receive all our 1880 subscriptions during the month of January.

JOHN R. CLARK has just been campaigning it at Caro. At a meeting held there last Sunday evening he got 21 signers to the pledge, among whom were the leading merchant of the place, the Editor of the Advertiser and the Prosecuting Attorney. On Monday evening he gave his lecture entitled "To and Fro in London" to a large audience.

THE new Unitarian Church of Jackson will be dedicated next week, the services commencing on Monday evening and continuing through Tuesday and Wednesday. Sermons will be preached by several of the leading Unitarian and Universalist clergymen of the State, and a religious feast is anticipated. Rev. Ira C Billman, formerly of Adrian, is pastor of the new society.

AT a meeting of the Opera House managers last week a new janitor was chosen in place of H. Welfer, whose term of service had expired. The choice fell upon Wm. Jordan, and we think the Association has made a very wise selection. Mr. Jordan has been a very efficient street commissioner of the village during the past year and we have no doubt he will fill the janitor's chair with equal acceptance.

IT has been reported that Jehiel Davidson was going to vacate his room in the HERALD building. That is a mistake. He intends to remain there during the year, and will make a specialty, as heretofore, of choice confectionery, cigars, and fruits of all kinds. He has furnished this market with a class of fruits that have never before been offered on sale here and will keep a still larger assortment during the coming season.

MR. T. T. KNEELAND has furnished us with a copy of the Weekly Chronicle, of Leadville, Colorado, which was sent him by his son Henry. Among other statistics showing the marvelous growth of the "Great Mining Camp" it gives the total mining transfers for the year 1879. Exclusive of all transferring where the consideration was less than $500, and not counting mortgages or trust deeds at all, the total amount is $35,350,940; over thirty-five millions of mining property sold in one year.

MARRIAGE BELLS.

New Year's evening was made memorable by a very enjoyable affair at the residence of Mr. & Mrs. D. C. Blair, of Napoleon, Mich., the occasion being the wedding reception of their only son, Herbert Mills Blair, and his bride, nee Miss Ida M. Littlefield, of Ypsilanti, Mich. The marriage occurred on Dec. 30, 1879, at the residence of the bride's sister, Mrs. H. A. Weeks, of Ypsilanti, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Joseph Estabrook, of State Normal School, who also united in marriage Mr. & Mrs. D. C. Blair twenty-six years before. The bride was a teacher in the Grammar grade of Ypsilanti Union School—a young lady of culture and sterling worth, who will be missed in school, church and society, and is sure to gather about her many heart warm friends wherever she may go.

A large company were assembled to welcome the married pair and offer congratulations and good wishes.—The decorations were beautiful and significant. Among the various designs in evergreen we noticed the motto "Welcome," a marriage bell, a horse-shoe suspended with white ribbon, and "Good Luck" and "Herbert and Ida" wrought on opposite sides in white immortelles. A touching tribute to the deceased daughter Hattie attracted much attention; her portrait entwined with evergreens and surrounded with the words "Absent but not forgotten."

Gifts were numerous, well chosen, and beautiful, refreshments complete; music by the Napoleon band inspiring, and the wish often expressed that the promise that evening betokened of a happy future, might be fully realized. From the doubts, hopes and mystery of life may Herbert and Ida work out for themselves a well rounded measure of prosperity and happiness.

FIFTY YEARS OF MARRIED LIFE.

Mr. and Mrs. Ezra F. Blood Celebrate their Golden Wedding—A Brilliant Party and Happy Reunion.

Fifty years is a long period in the span of human life. What momentous changes in this busy world half a century brings about. And amid the fleeting events and shifting scenes of earth, it rarely occurs that a man and wife march down life's pathway together for ten decades. A Golden Wedding is an event which seldom occurs in this fast age.

The first celebration of the kind which Tecumseh society has enjoyed in several years took place at the residence of Ezra F. Blood on Monday evening last. And the anniversary celebration was held on the same farm which witnessed the wedding party just fifty years before. Mr. & Mrs. Blood were married in Jan. 1830, at the house of Gen. Brown, in Brownville. Mr. Blood had already taken up the farm on which he has since lived, had made a clearing and erected a log house. After the ceremony at Gen. Brown's all the villagers went down to the Blood place, took a fiddler along and enjoyed a good old-fashioned dance. This dancing party beneath their own roof constituted the wedding party of the bride and groom. Four witnesses who were present at the wedding are still living in Tecumseh: Gen. Brown, Mrs. Wm. McNair, and Mr. & Mrs. W. W. Tilton.

But it is the Golden Anniversary which we set out to describe.

At an early hour on Monday evening the guests began to arrive and soon the old homestead was filled with a regular social pioneer gathering.—The party was made up mostly of old settlers although there was a considerable sprinkling of young people present. The guests in attendance numbered over one hundred, and never has it been our lot to attend a party where both old and young seemed to enjoy themselves better.

After a couple of hours very pleasantly passed in social converse the guests were seated for refreshments and Rev. Wm. Grandy then made a very happy address. He congratulated Mr. & Mrs. Blood upon their successful journey through life, and in behalf of their assembled friends made a formal presentation of the wedding gifts in these words:

MR. AND MRS. BLOOD,

Dear Friends:—Please accept these tokens of our loving interest, and of our warm congratulations that you have reached the fiftieth, the golden anniversary of your marriage day. We rejoice that for you the slowly passing years have been marked with much more of joy than of sorrow, and now as you have reached life's peaceful afternoon, when the golden sun is sinking slowly towards its setting, we gather around you with earnest wishes for your welfare, trusting that you may long be spared, and that the years may be marked with what we esteem life's most precious gold, the blessings of health and of "the peace that cannot be taken away."

Rev. A. J. Bigelow then offered prayer, and a feast of coffee and cakes followed. This part of the entertainment was admirably carried out, and the refreshments were superb. After the cakes and coffee came a little "feast of reason and flow of soul."

Rev. Grandy assumed charge of the exercises and introduced S. C. Stacy who spoke briefly, and then Mrs. J. Tallman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Blood read a beautiful poem entitled "The Golden Wedding." A quartette was sung, "The Family Meeting," and F. A. Dewey, of Cambridge, made a few very appropriate remarks. The guests than began to disperse, all wishing the honored couple many more years of life and happiness, and all feeling that they had enjoyed a notable and happy reunion.

Among the friends present from abroad were Mrs. Jacob Tallman, Mt. Morris, N. Y.; L. C. Blood and daughter May, of Lansing; Mr. & Mrs. C. A. Blackmar, Mr. &. Mrs. Capt. Case, and Mr. & Mrs. F. A. Dewey, of Cambridge; Mr. & Mrs. A. C. Smith, Woodstock; Wm. Blackmar, Napoleon; Mrs. C. E. Young, Adrian; Mrs. Col. Church, Ithica, and Mrs. Col. Saviers, of St. Louis, Mich.

The array of gifts was beautiful, and they came as a free offering. Mr. and Mrs. Blood had insisted they should receive no presents, and such a report had gone out, but their friends also insisted upon showing their esteem and hence put their wishes in formal shape. The gifts were concealed until about nine o'clock, when they were brought out, much to the surprise and gratification of Mr. and Mrs. Blood.

The poem of Mrs. Tallman touched all hearts, and there was many a moistened eye in the company during its recital. It merits publicity and we insert it entire:

The Golden Wedding.

With measured step, another year rolls round,
And we have met again on sacred ground,
To cheer, enliven, and revive the past,
Trusting this memorial's not the last.

Have we improved the gliding years all through,
Have we more wisdom gained, and thoughtful grew;
Or have the transient seasons flitted by,
And left a barren desert, smitten dry?

Shall we be found with lamps untrimmed,
And shall the light of their brightness be dimmed?
As we each go zealously forth to reap
The seed we have sown in the trenches deep?

Times mysterious, unrelenting power,
Has given no promise of a single hour;
But when life's ebbing sun is setting low,
May the lingering twilight round us glow,

Some paths may not be strewn with fairest flowers;
A treach'rous thorn is found in blooming bowers;
'Tis strange, the weeds are what we often call,
When passing by the roses blossomed fall.

Let pleasures ever blend with careful thought,
Then memory will ne'er shrink back for naught
That looms 'gainst faith and hope within us found,
Re-echoing back no murmuring sound.

We're prone to think the darkness more than day,
Forgetful, back the cloud's a shining ray;
Though oft the bitter with the sweet is mixed,
And rarely do we know what lies betwixt.

All through life's dim furrow we plow and toil,
And leave a prayer upon the weedy soil,
Thus may it bring forth a sweet fragrant balm,
And the eventide a hallowed calm.

Let not the coming years athwart us back,
Or mirror like, unvail the senseless track
Of dark forebodings, which may cross the way—
But to disperse as vapors of the day.

The past is gone, the future know we not;
Ah, well, we trust, we ne'er shall be forgot.
Like forest leaves we scatter here and there,
And then return, the joys of each to share.

We scarce can trace Time's foot-steps up to now,
So gentle and slow, age lighted on the brow
Of father and mother; like filtered gold,
They're passing before us not seemingly old.

Love, peace and joy be with them evermore,
As the twilight shades cross the threshhold door
'Twill fall as tinkling music on this pair,
Who have lived these fifty years of joy and care.

The dark surging waves of the ebbing tide
As requiems wail, have drifted aside,
Leaving the shadow of waters so deep,
A hush of chaos encircles their feet.

This golden wedding day will cheer the heart
With memory dear, though a tear may start
As down life's declivity they descend,
Hand in hand across the valley wend.

In the by and by, when the eye grows dim,
The dirge-like notes with a plaintive ring,
Will breathe a prayer of remembrance sweet,
Of the dear old home where loved ones meet.

So well have you cherished life's bright flowers,
That we trust you may long be spared as ours;
Together tread the aisles of eden-land,
Year after year a reunited band.

AFTER the numerous discussions of Mr. Edison's Electric light, it will be interesting to see exactly what claims for it Mr. Edison himself is willing to endorse. A paper is announced to appear in the Midwinter Scribner by Mr. Edison's mathematician and assistant, Mr. Francis R. Upton, which besides the writer's intimate connection with the invention itself, has the further voucher of a letter from Mr. Edison, certifying that it is "the first correct and authoritative account."—It is said that the paper will contain much that has not and will not be elsewhere published.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

CONGRESS AGAIN AT WORK.

Changes in Making Appropriations—The Legal Tender Case.

From our Regular Correspondent.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 9, '80.

We have got Congress back again now, and the real work for which Congressmen are created must begin in earnest. Not much of it has been done this week, however. It takes these law makers about ten days to sober off after a two week's vacation. From my observations during several years in Washington, I am thoroughly convinced that a change in the time of assembling Congress would be a decided improvement. The legislative work performed previous to the holidays amounts to nothing, and the Houses are scarcely convened before a demoralizing holiday recess comes in, after which just as much time is consumed in getting settled as at the beginning. Representative Steele has a bill now before the House that ought to pass. It repeals the law requiring a meeting of Congress in December, and names the second Monday in January in each year instead. This proposition meets with much favor.

In one thing, however, the present Congress has displayed a good deal of industry. The members have lost no time in introducing their bills, and great stacks of them are in the hands of nearly every committee. But the country need not be alarmed at the great influx of all sorts of measures. Nearly all of these bills are safe in the pigeon-holes of committee rooms, where they will sleep a long and peaceful sleep. Many of them are not introduced to be acted upon. Almost every Congressman has a number of constituents who think they have a call to take a hand in National legislation, and as the obstinate and unappreciative people will not send these amateur law-makers to Congress, they have no recourse but to prepare bills embodying their erudite conceptions and send them to "our member," with a request that he present them. The obliging member complies, but has no further interest in the matter. This is why so many unwise measures are offered. It is a sort of ventilation that does no great harm, while it makes many persons happy.

Senator Davis, of West Virginia, chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, has a proposition to repeal all permanent annual appropriations. An investigation has developed the fact that there are nearly one hundred permanent annual appropriations which are never supervised by the legislative branch of the Government, and about which it knows nothing. Sometimes the amount of the expenditures under these appropriations have exceeded the amount of appropriations made be Congress in the regular appropriation bills. In many instances, where fees are collected and the expense of running the Department of the Government collecting them is paid out of the fees so collected, there is little supervision over the expenditures whatever, by even the higher branches of Government, and none at all by Congress. The bill of Senator Davis will provide for repealing all these permanent appropriations except the provision for the interest on the public debt, so as to make the Treasury the grand receptacle for all moneys collected for or on behalf of the Government, and requiring a specific appropriation to get it out. Secretary Sherman joins with Senator Davis in recommending this important change.

The action of the Supreme Court in refusing to advance the legal tender case on the calendar is something of a disappointment, to Congressmen especially, yet it is not an unreasonable result. While members of Congress are anxious to have a decision of the Court that would relieve them of responsibility, it is not unnatural that the court should decline to go out of its way to grapple with the troublesome questions involved. The Court has once passed upon the legal tender qualities of the greenback, and the remaining question as to the duration of their necessary existence will perhaps settle itself if let alone. Anyhow, Congress must answer to the people for its course in the premises, without any assistance from the Court. Considering the uncomfortably mixed condition of the Congressional mind on the subject, this may be a misfortune in which the business interests of the country will have to share. Speaking of greenbacks, Dennis Kearney has been this week in attendance upon the National Greenback-Labor Conference. He says he represents the people of the Pacific slope, and wants a convention of national reformers, who will furnish "the people a platform to stand upon and support, and if they fail to do this they may continue to starve." He opposed a fusion of any kind with any party, and says the greenbackers, workingmen and nationals will never fly as a tail to any party's kite.

By an agreement made previous to the recess, the House has been devoting itself to a discussion of the revised rules for that body submitted by the Committee on rules. The consideration of this subject is to continue from day to day, to the exclusion of all other business, until disposed of. None of the work done by the committee touches questions involving political discussions or the relations of majority and minority, except to give in a single instance one additional weapon to the minority with which to defeat measures. This is afforded by making privileged a motion for the House to take a recess, which will be in order at any time except when a motion to fix a day to which the House will adjourn, or a motion to adjourn, is pending. The new privileged motion rule is due to Mr. Stephens, and is pretty sure to be adopted. As a whole the new rules are an admirable revision and simplification of the intricate and complicated code now followed. Representative Blackburn has an amendment, under the operation of which, every member may be compelled to vote on every question when present. This would stop the breaking of a quorum by the minority by simply sitting dumb in their seats. Mr. Blackburn has been "spoiling" to make a speech on this subject. Another Democratic member of the committee says that, while he would be glad to see such a rule in force, he has no expectation that it will ever be adopted. He thinks that neither party will be willing to abridge the rights of the minority, which although Republican now, is not unlikely to be democratic in the next Congress.

THE FARMERS' PAGE.

FARMERS' GATHERINGS.

We are glad to see that the farmers in several localities where the State Board has not provided for institutes this winter are talking of holding institutes of their own. This is as it should be. The few professors of the Agricultural College cannot lecture everywhere nor is it necessary they should, if the farmers will only make a good use of their "home talent." At Charlotte where an institute was held last winter and where the farmers know something of its advantages, they are now making arrangements to hold another without any special outside help. The Saginaw County Farmers' Club has also appointed a committee of two to confer with a similar committee on the part of East Saginaw and arrange for holding a first-class farmers' institute in that city at an early day. Both of these will undoubtedly succeed, and their example should be imitated by a score of other localities in the State. Whether it is deemed advisable, or not, to hold an institute, there is scarcely a village in the southern part of the State which might not profitably sustain a grange or farmers' club of some kind during the winter months at least. The social and educational advantages of such gatherings can hardly be overestimated, to say nothing of the necessity for union and cooperation among farmers to prevent their being fleeced in detail by railroad monopolies, patent right swindlers and the thousand and one combinations against which individuals are powerless.

The papers and discussions at institutes and other gatherings of practical and intelligent farmers are, of course, the most valuable to tillers of the soil in that immediate vicinity, many of them having direct reference to the locality and its peculiarities of soil and seasons; still they contain much of general and permanent interest and their value is greatly enhanced by being properly reported in the local or agricultural journals. Such notes are very welcom at this office, and readers favorably situated for furnishing them may hereby consider themselves specially invited to do so. We close our little screed with the following extracts from a paper in feeding stock read before the Saginaw Club at its last meeting by Mr. James Graham, of Thomastown:

"For feeding horses I generally calculate to raise good hay, oats, corn and some carrots. Let me say right here: What I call hay is three-fourths timothy and one-fourth clover, cut and well cured about the Fourth of July and about eight quart of salt to each ton when put in the mow. Oats and corn should be secured dry to prevent must. I never feed musty oats or corn in any shape to horses. Young colts require to be well fed and cared for the first winter. They should have a loose box in a good warm stable so they can move round at pleasure. In fine weather let them out in a lot to get exercise. I feed about one quart of oats in the morning, all the good hay they will eat and four quarts of carrots cut up fine at night. Older colts, from one to three years old, require plenty of hay or millet, some carrots and oats. I have no definite rule to go by, I generally look at the colts and handle them, and not at the feed. If they are in good condition and able to jump and play like so many kittens, I think they are doing well enough.

I generally feed them some cut feed in the winter. I keep my oat straw in the barn if good and bright, cut it up fine with a cutting box; then have corn and oats ground together in proportion of two bushels of corn to three of oats. For a horse weighing between twelve and thirten hundred I feed half a bushel of cut straw and four quarts of feed night and morning, and from four to six quarts of oats at noon, and what hay they want to eat. By cutting straw it saves hay and I think it is equally as good. In cold, freezing weather I wet the feed with boiling water. I think it is better than to mix with cold water. Cattle should be fed liberally, especially cows that are coming in; they will pay for all they eat in milk and butter, and the calves will be strong and healthy. They should have good, warm, clean stables, and be turned out every day to water, and if the weather is fine let them amuse themselves for four or five hours picking around the straw stack, not because they are hungry, but for a change. In cold, stormy weather they should be out only long enough to drink. Corn stalks that have been cut up before getting too ripe and before the frost strikes them, and well cured, are good feed. I prefer cutting up the stalks with a cutting box. The cattle will eat them up cleaner, especially if they are mixed with a little ground feed, bran or shorts. By cutting the stalks we economize in feed and save some hard work in handling the manure in the spring.

The cutting of feed will depend on circumstances, the amount of fodder we have for the number of animals we have to feed, the price that hay sells for and the extra labor required to prepare it. This is something concerning which every one must judge for himself, whether it will pay or not. In feeding sheep I give them a little of everything I feed to other stock; they like a variety. If they look well and healthy I let them alone. The next question is what kind of feed shall we raise for them. I would say all kinds that we can grow to the best advantage and are best adapted to our soil. Timothy and clover, and all kinds of grass grow well as a general thing on our soil, but if it is not cut until it gets too ripe and then bleached out with rain and sun for a week, it is almost worthless for feed. I commenced cutting clover and timothy hay last season on the 26th of June; had all my hay cut and taken care of before wheat harvest. I would rather lose a little in shrinkage by cutting early than run the risk of losing the crop after harvest. If oats are cut when the top grain is ripe and secured dry, the straw makes good feed, and there is not much waste in the grain shelling out. Millet, when sowed thick and cut before it gets too ripe, is excellent feed. Raise plenty of roots, and have them taken care of before the frost strikes them." — Michigan Homestead.

Feels Young Again.

"My mother was afflicted a long time with Neuralgia and a dull, heavy, inactive condition of the whole system, headache, nervous prostration, and was almost helpless. No physicians or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters, with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over 70 years old.—We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family."—A lady, Providence, R. I.

DR. A. FRASER'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external disease.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have not space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

MARKET REVIEW.

OFFICE OF THE HERALD, Thursday, Jan. 15, 1880.

The local [illegible] during the past week has been very dull in everything. The roads have been well nigh impassable, and hence but very little grain of any kind has been sold here. Wheat stands at about $1.30, the Detroit price being $1.35. The figures in New York ranged from $1.50 to $1.53.

The market in live hogs has been quite active, but the soft weather has shut out dressed pork almost entirely. Prices rule about as they have for the past two or three weeks. As the roads become better, local trade will improve, and an upward tendency in prices may be looked for. The ruling prices for farmers' products are named in the table below:

AROUND THE COUNTY.

EAST RAISIN.

The E. R. L. Society held its regular meeting as usual on last Friday evening. The attendance was good, and an unusually good program was presented. It consisted of the following:

Inst. Solo—Mary Billmeyer.
Rec.—Carrie Doty.
Dec.—Robert Boyd.
Dialogue—A. L. Arner and B. A. Garlinghouse.
Chip Basket—Johnnie Richard.
Vocal Solo—C. S. Lester.
Recess.
Reading—Libbie Richard.
Debate—Question: Resolved, That the course of Napoleon was justifiable.
Aff.—C. S. Lester.
Neg.—W. E. Doty.

The question was decided in favor of the negative.

The question for the next meeting is, Resolved, That in matters of dress the Americans are influenced more by fashion than by reason.

The Literary Library is a grand success, and adds greatly to the growing interest of the members. Another addition of books will be made this week. The number of volumes will then amount to about sixty.

Why can not the East Tecumseh and East Raisin societies join their programs and get up an old-fashioned exhibition? We are old friends and can have a rousing time.

RAISIN VALLEY.

Wm. Charles was present at the last week's Seminary prayer meeting.—Glad to see him.

The Crane house on the hill, which has been empty for some time past, has been leased to a Mr. Howes for five years.

There were no services at the M. E. church last Sunday.

The present officers of the Students' Literary Society are the following:

President—Emma Palmer.
Vice Pres.—Ed Comfort.
Secretary—Charles Fowler.
Treasurer—Sylvia Maxwell.
Marshal—Geo. Jones.
Member of Ex. Committee—Norris Morey.

The regular time for quarterly meeting will occur on next Saturday and the following Sunday. School will close in consequence on Friday of that week.

The Reform Club meeting last Tuesday evening was a very interesting one and a large number were in attendance. The next meeting (Jan. 27) will be of a literary character.

Richard Harkness has been engaged for several days repairing the sheds at the Friends' church. Some grading has also been done about them, and their condition is now much improved.

It is reported that coal beds of sufficient extent to pay for mining, are being found on the farm owned by Fleming Stanley, in Ohio. Parties are now prospecting on and in the vicinity of his farm. Fleming left for Ohio a week ago and has not yet returned. We hope the report is true.

In pursuance of a letter written by Elizabeth Comstock to her daughter Edna Green, and which was read before the Society of Friends here, a committee was appointed to solicit aid for the Kansas refugees, both in money and clothing. As a result, about $50 in money and four large boxes of clothing have been forwardsd from this vicinity to the place of need.

RIDGEWAY.

John Lucas has moved from the Exchange into A. E. Palmer's house.

Mrs. Samuel Arner, who has been on the sick list for some time, is improving.

Jacob Helm and wife, of Dayton, Ohio, are visiting relatives in Ridgeway.

Miss Salome Clark is spending a few weeks in Hillsdale.

On his way to church last Sunday, Ransom Remington had a tip-over. No damage except to the polish on his boots.

The readers of the HERALD in this locality seem to be highly pleased with the new form.

The speech of Mr. Stacy at the railroad meeting here on Monday, has set our folks to work with a vim, and we hope they will not stop until a thorough canvass has been made.

There was a wedding at Brad. Zibble's on the 8th inst., at which time Henry Dibble and Ellen Zibble were married the Rev. Thomas Lupton officiating.

At the next meeting of the Philo., Rev. A. B. Wood is announced to lecture on "Life in other Planets." Everybody should come out.

There was a large gathering of Chas. C. Smith and wife at their residence one day last week. The house was filled to overflowing, and everybody seemed happy, especially the brides and grooms.

Erve says "Pinafore" will be put on the boards at the Macon Opera House. Did you ever?

G. P. Waring attended the convention of undertakers, held at Jackson last week.

Geo. Pocklington's new grinder is in full blast. Wall Cadmus was the first patron.

C. A. Sharp has taken a new departure. He may be seen perambulating the cross roads with samples of picture frames, etc., soliciting orders.

CLINTON.

Mr. Leslie Dearborn, of Muskegon, was in town last week.

Mrs. John McCollum, of Lockport, N. Y., spent a few days last week visiting at J. E. McCollum's.

The "Last Loaf" was presented Friday night, and "The Fireman" Saturday night, at Town Hall, by Clinton home talent, to a very good audience each evening. Some performed their respective parts creditably, whilst others showed unmistakable evidence, that as actors at least, they had widely missed their calling.

A very large and at times painful tumor was successfully removed, on Thursday last, from the neck of Mrs. N. Johnson, living about 1½ miles north west of here, by Dr. A. W. Alvord, of this place. The operation was very skillfully performed in a little less than eight minutes, and without the aid of anesthetics. The tumor can be seen at the Doctor's office.

A very pleasant family gathering took place at John P. Silvers last Thursday afternoon. All the children, five sons and two daughters, together with many of the grand children, were present. It had been a long time since the children had all met together under their father's roof, and it is but natural to suppose that meetings of that kind cannot extend far into the future, for already the visible signs of an advanced age are manifest, the frosts of seventy-six winters having whitened that venerable father's locks, for another gathering beyond the limits of time.

Miss Kate Burton is at home for a few weeks, visiting a sister.

The Baptist social was held at Dexter Woodward's on Tuesday evening last.

The Red Ribbon social will be held at Andrew McDermot's on Friday evening next.

No news from the Clinton Pope since his departure.

The Congregationalists are holding a series of meetings. Services are held every evening this week.

Prof. Dickie, of Albion College, gave a temperance address last Sunday afternoon at the Town Hall, and again in the evening at the Congregational church, in which service all the other churches united. The house was crowded and the address was a very strong one. The professor is a very logical and eloquent speaker.

L. T. Star was going north the other day with his horse and buggy, when his horse began his antics by throwing one foot over the cross piece of the shafts. A general mixing up of horse, buggy and harness followed, and the buggy was considerably demoralized before the fracas was ended.

SPRINGVILLE.

The railroad is booming.

The teachers' conference, which is held at School District No. 4, will meet on Thursday evening instead of Wednesday evening, until further notice.

Wm. Queal sold six hogs in Adrian last week, weighing respectively 451, 473, 350, 369, 408, 497 lbs.; averaging 406⅓ lbs. apiece.

Our singing school at the M. E. church is prospering finely. It is held on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. On Wednesday afternoons Mr. Wright invites the juvenile class to meet at 4 o'clock for practice.

Last Friday evening about ten couple of our young folks attended the social hop at H. Lancaster's, Evans Lake. A pleasant time. Over to Hank's we always go to have a good time you know.

Last Friday evening while George Shugars was coming to Springville on horse back, his horse stumbled and fell striking on its head. Its neck was probably broken as it was dead about as soon as it fell.

S. Morey, J. H. Smith and Benj. Laur, the railroad committee appointed in this township to secure the right of way and make a preliminary survey, have been at work the past week. They report a favorable route and the right of way has been nearly all secured.

The HERALD as it appeared to us last week in its new form, was with the wishes of success to its publisher. It being now an eight-page paper it is more convenient to the reader. The systematic formality of its reading matter, together with its plain print, makes it worthy the patronage of the surrounding country.

The South Carolina Minstrel troupe were billed for this place Monday evening, but owing to the inclemency of the weather, they retired to the hotel. The tables were removed from the dining room, and those present that wished (but we didn't wish) partook of a little shake of the foot. Music was furnished by Purchase and Teachout's band.

EAST TECUMSEH.

Below we present the program of the East Tecumseh Literary Society for Saturday evening, Jan. 24th:

Address—Rev. Wm. Grandy.
Music—S. I. Osborn.
Music—Eunice Davidson.
Inst. Duet—Minnie Hendershot and Frank Benedict.
Declamations—Sam Boyce, Thos. Cleveland, Fred Hendershot.
Select Readings—Emma Rogers, Ali Kelly, Will Hendershot.
Recitations—Kate Boyce, Mamie Gallatin, Effie Hendershot.

SOUTH MACON.

Owing to the unfavorable weather last Tuesday evening, and at the request of many leading citizens in the vicinity, the exhibition which took place at the Grange Hall last Tuesday evening, will be repeated on Tuesday evening next. There will be a partial change of program. Prices the same as before.

THERE being a general feeling throughout the State that the standard of qualifications required of teachers is far too low, the State Board of Education has ordered that an average of 75 per cent. shall be required for obtaining a certificate of the third grade, 80 for the second grade and 90 for the first grade, and that the spring examination in 1880 shall be held on Saturday the 12th of March.

GLEANINGS FROM THE COUNTY PRESS.

The boiler in the county jail has been repaired.

Blissfield Advance.—Geo. Sparrow, Postmaster at Grosvenor, has resigned, and the office is discontinued. Postmaster Stearns has been ordered to take possession of all government property belonging to that office, and all mail for Grosvenor will hereafter be left at Blissfield.

Adrian Press.—The village of Deerfield has just ordained "That it shall be unlawful for any horse, mare, mule, colt, jack, jenny, goat, bull, ox, steer, cow, heifer, calf, hog, shoat, pig, sheep, goose, turkey or duck, to run at large in any public street or alley." Won't some of these restrictions deprive a large number of the inhabitants of their rights?

Deerfield Record.—A saloon-keeper's character was truthfully illustrated in one of Deerfield's saloons on Wednesday afternoon. It seems that a toper of the village, after having spent about five dollars at this saloon in two days, as he says, called up a brother toper to the bar and ordered the drinks. But the saloon-keeper, thinking perhaps that he had spent all his money, sarcastically demanded the pay before the liquor was drawn.

No Place for Idiots.

Adrian Journal.—Supervisor Adam Drehrer, of Riga, returned from Pontiac, Tuesday, whither he had been with an idiot, for whom he wished to engage board in that luny institution for an indefinite time. The authorities there politely informed Mr. D. that the asylum was not intended for the reception of idiots, and he was accordingly returned here to be placed in our County asylum.

Really Too Bad.

Adrian Journal.—Friday evening a woman with a thin shawl covering her shoulders, leading a child about six years old, was wandering around in the cold and rain in the east end of town. They were given food and shelter by a charitable family on Toledo street. The woman gave her name as Smedley, and said she was from Grand Rapids, and came here in search of a vagabond of a husband, who she learned after arriving here had gone to Toledo. She was furnished means to take her to that place, and she left on No. 8 Saturday morning.

Powder Explosion.

Deerfield Record.—A five-year old boy of Byron Stansbury, who lives about two mils west of this village, met with quite a serious accident on Thursday morning. The boy while at play got possession of a powder flask, that contained quite a large quantity of powder, and threw it into the fire. The powder immediately ignited and burst the flask, throwing a sheet of flame upon the boy, burning off his eye-brows, half the hair upon his head and badly blistering his face, but not injuring his eyes in the least. That boy will be careful how he plays with powder in the future.

From Ohio State.

Adrian Press.—The following on file in the Register's office of Lenawee co. is a verbatim copy of an acknowledgement of an assignment, taken before a Lucas county, Ohio, notary public, and sufficiently attests the official learnin' of the Lucas county men: "State of Ohio, county of Lucas, ss. Personally appeared before me, ——, a Notary Public of said county, John Eschenburg, personally appeared John Eschenburg before me he being known to me, to me to be the person who executed the above instrument, &c. Who shall deny Ohio the right to the Presidential succession? Another functionary subscribes himself "—— ——, Notary Republic."

Freaks of the Wind.

Morenci Observer.—On Sunday evening at 6 o'clock a progressive, vigorous tornado began a lively business in its peculiar way about a mile west of Lyons, and continued its course up the territorial road through the town. When it passed Carman's, tearing down one of his chimneys and breaking a front window of his store, Carman came out and circumspectly measured the thing, which he says was some twenty rods wide. Our reporter gathered the following inventory of the playful little antics it performed: Demolished fences generally, and threw down eight tombstones; lifted four outhouses from their moorings various distances; tore off the north side of the roof of the hotel barn and the roof of the hotel's wash-house; razed the remaining walls of the old corner store; blew a locust tree on C. G. Hinkle's house; and racked the steeple of the Universalist church.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

FUNNY SIGHTS.

I saw a cow-hide in the grass,
A rush-light on the floor;
I saw a candle-stick in the mud
A bell-pull at the door.
I saw a horse-fly up the creek
A cat-nip at her food;
I saw a chestnut-burr and heard
A shell-bark in the wood.
I saw a jack-plane off a board,
A car-spring off the track;
I saw a saw-dust off the floor
And then a carpet-tack.
I saw a monkey wrench a hat
From a fair lady's pate;
I saw a rattle-snake a bird,
And hogs-head on a plate.
I saw a brandy-smash a glass,
I saw a shooting-star;
I've heard the corn-stalk in the field
And pig iron crow-bar.
I saw a pin-wheel off a post,
A wheel-right in a shop;
I saw a gun-sling on a bag,
I saw a ginger-pop.
I saw a house-fly over a field,
I saw an ox-roast too;
I saw a shad-roe and clam-bake,
And saw a chicken-stew.
I saw a sword-fish from a bank,
And heard the water-sprout;
I saw tobacco spit, and then
I heard an eye-ball out;
I heard a fence rail at the din,
I heard a waist-band play
A lovely strain—a sweet spittoon—
And then I went away.

THE CHURCH ROAD.

Burdette's Interview with the Railroad Brakeman.

On the road once more, with Lebanon fading away in the distance, the passenger drumming idly on the window pane, the cross passenger sound asleep and the tall thin passenger reading "General Grant's Tour Around the World," and wondering why "Green's August Flower" should be printed above the doors of "A Buddhist temple at Benares." To me comes the brakeman, and seating himself on the arm of the seat says:

"I went to church yesterday."

"Yes?" I said, with that interested inflection that askes for more. "And what church did you attend?"

"Which do you guess?"

"Some union mission church?" I hazarded.

"Naw," he said, "I don't like to run on these branch roads very much. I don't often go to church, but when I do, I want to run on the main line, where your run is regular and you go schedule time and don't have to wait on connections. I don't like to run on a branch. Good enough, but I don't like it."

"Episcopal?" I guessed.

"Limited express," he said, "all palace cars and two dollars extra for a seat; fast time and only stop at the big stations. Nice line, but too exhaustive for a brakeman. All train men in uniform, conductor's punch and lantern silver-plated, and no train boys allowed. Then the passengers are allowed to talk back at the conductor, and it makes them to free and easy. No, I couldn't stand the palace cars. Rich road, though. Don't often hear of a receiver being appointed for that line. Some mighty nice people travel on it, too."

"Universalist?" I suggested.

"Broad gauge," said the brakeman; "does too much complimentary business. Everybody travels on a pass. Conductor doesn't get a fare once in fifty miles. Stops at all flag stations and won't run into anything but a union depot. No smoking car on the train. Train orders are rather vague though, and the train men don't get along well with the passengers. No, I didn't go to the Universalist, though I know some awfully good men that run on that road."

"Presbyterian?" I asked.

"Narrow gauge, eh?" said the brakeman, "pretty track, straight as a rule; tunnel right through a mountain rather than go around it; spirit level grade; passengers have to show their tickets before they get on the train. Mighty strict road, but the cars are a little narrow; have to sit one in a seat and no room in the aisle to dance. Then there's no stop over tickets allowed; got to go straight through to the station you're ticketed for, or you can't get on at all. When the car's full, no extra coaches; cars built at the shops to hold just so many and nobody else allowed on. But you don't often hear of an accident on that road. It's run right up to the rules."

"Maybe you joined the Free Thinkers?" I said.

"Scrub road," said the brakeman, "dirt road bed and no ballast; no time card and no train dispatcher. All trains run wild and every engineer makes his own time, just as he pleases. Smoke if you want to; kind of a go-as-you-please road. Too many side tracks, and every switch wide open all the time, with the switchman sound asleep and the target lamp dead out. Get on as you please and get of when you want to. Don't have to show your tickets, and the conductor isn't expected to do anything but amuse the passengers. No, sir, I was offered a pass, but I don't like the line. I don't like to travel on a road that has no terminus. Do you know, sir, I asked a division superintendent where that road run to, and he said he hoped to die if he knew. I asked him if the general superintendent could tell me, and he said he didn't believe they had a general superintendent, and if they had, he didn't know any more about the road than the passengers. I asked him who he reported to, and he said "nobody." I asked a conductor who he got his orders from and he said he didn't take orders from any living man or dead ghost. And when I asked the engineer who he got his orders from, he said he'd like to see anybody give him orders, he'd run the train to suit himself or he'd run it into the ditch. Now you see, sir, I'm a railroad man, and I don't care to run on a road that has no time, makes no connections, runs nowhere and has no superintendent. It may be all right, but I've railroaded too long to understand it."

"Did you try the Methodist?" I said.

"Now you're shouting," he said with some enthusiasm. "Nice road, eh? Fast time and plenty of passengers. Engines carry a power of steam, and don't you forget it; steam gauge shows a hundred and enough all the time. Lively road; when the conductor shouts "all aboard," you can hear him to the next station. Every train lamp shines like a headlight. Stop-over checks given on all through tickets; passenger can drop off the train as often as he likes, do the station two or three days and hop on the next revival train that comes thundering along. Good, whole-souled companionable conductors; ain't a road in the country where the passengers feel more at home. No passes; every passenger pays full traffic rates for his ticket. Wesleyanhouse air brake on all trains, too; pretty safe road, but I didn't ride over it yesterday."

"Maybe you went to the Congregational church?" I said.

"Popular road," said the brakeman, "an old road, too; one of the very oldest in this country. Good road bed and comfortable cars. Well managed road, too; directors don't interfere with division superintendents and train orders. Road's mighty popular, but it's pretty independent, too. See, didn't one of the division superintendents down east discontinue one of the oldest stations on the line two or three years ago? But it is a mighty pleasant road to travel on. Always has such a splendid class of passengers."

"Perhaps you tried the Baptist?" I guessed once more.

"Ah, ha?" said the brakeman, "she's a daisy, isn't she? River road; beautiful curves; sweep around anything to keep close to the river, but it's all steel rail and rock ballast, single track all the way and not a side track from the round house to the terminus. Takes a heap of water to run it through; double tank at every station and there isn't an engine in the shops that can pull a pound or run a mile with less than two gauges. But it runs through a lovely country; these river roads always do; river on one side and hills on the other, and it's a steady climb up the grade all the way till the run ends where the fountainhead of the river begins. Yes, sir, I'll take the river road every time for a lovely trip, sure connections and good time, and no prairie dust blowing in at the windows. And yesterday, when the conductor came around for the tickets with a little basket punch, I didn't ask him to pass me, but I paid my fare like a little man—twenty-five cents for an hour's run and a little concert by the passengers throwed in. I tell you, Pilgrim, you take the river road when you want—"

But just here the long whistle from the engine announced a station and the brakeman hurried to the door, shouting:

"Zionsville! This train makes no stops between here and Indianapolis!"

I deem it my duty to acquaint suffering humanity with the fact that ST. JACOB'S OIL is the most beneficial remedy ever introduced; this I have practically tested. For the past sixteen years I have suffered with Rheumatism, and so severely that I was often robbed of my night's rest. A change of weather would have the most painful effect on me, for then I could move neither hands nor feet. I tried every known remedy, but of no avail; at last somebody recommended St. Jacob's Oil, and I concluded to try it, but with little hope for relief. Having hardly used half a bottle, the pains diminished, and to-day I am well and hardy once more. The small sum of fifty cents had cured me.

THOMAS OTT, St. Boniface, Pa.

Poverty and Suffering.

"I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did them no good.—I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well and none of us have seen a sick day since, and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost—I know it.

A WORKINGMAN."

CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN RAILROAD.

There is possibly no link in the great railway chain, stretching across the American Continent, from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific slope, that forms so material a part of that great continental railroad and is of such importance as the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, running from the metropolis, Chicago, to the Missouri River at Omaha. In its construction from Chicago westward it was the first to connect with the Union Pacific, virtually making that road practicable, and well deserves the title it won of the "Old Pioneer." It had hard work as it forced its way over the then unsettled but fertile prairies of the States of Illinois and Iowa, but being the shorter or inside route and actually having less gradients or curvatives than its rivals to Council Bluffs, its records show achievements in speed, safety, regularity and reliability unsurpassed, if equalled, by any competing line.

Its improvements in the last two or three years have been simply remarkable, and the changes the most wonderful ever wrought in the East or West, in its roadway, rails and general equipment. It is now strictly first class, the model railroad, gravel ballasted, with steel rails, stone culverts, iron bridges, white oak ties, superior engines, airy and elegant coaches, supplied with the Miller couplings and Westinghouse steam brakes and attachments, in the shape of what have been called "marvels of splendor," the Pullman palace hotel cars, in which the traveller eats and sleeps in the most luxurious apartments, with all the comforts and conveniences of a well stocked home. The matchless tracks and the scientific outfit of this road are triumphs of art in railway construction. But in addition to its excellency of construction, it enjoys the signal advantages of natural location and a management that, from the highest official to the most subordinate employee, most sedulously cares for the convenience and satisfaction of its patrons. During the past year it was without a terminal detention, and such is the increase of its freight and travel that a double track is necessitated. The development of the road is marvelous—iron rails in 1865, steel rails in 1875, and steel rails and a double track in 1879.

The Chicago and Northwestern Railroad operates nearly 2,200 miles of road (the exact figures being 2,158) and reaches nearly every important point in Northern Illinois, Wisconsin, Northern Michigan, Iowa, Minnesota, running many miles into Dakota. It transports millions of passengers annually, and its freight carriage is simply enormous. From Chicago, westward, you can trace its California line, until you reach the Missouri river at Council Bluffs, opposite Omaha, a single run of nearly 500 miles. Northwestward, through Madison, the capital of Wisconsin, and through the pine woods of that State into Minnesota, 400 miles more. Again, looking from Chicago, you can trace a line through Sparta, Wisconsin, La Crosse in the same State, Winona, Owatonna and New Ulm, in Minnesota, and northwestward far into Dakota, 625 miles more of road. Again, coming to Chicago, we see two lines running northwardly—one along the lake shore to Milwaukee and thence to Fond du Lac, and the other running more inland through Janesville, Watertown, etc., also to Fond du Lac, thence north through Oshkosh, De Pere, Green Bay and Escanaba to Negaunee, Ishpeming and Marquette—another 440 miles of road. Then we have a line from Chicago Elgin, Rockford and Freeport; another from Clinton, Ia., to Anamosa, in the same State; another from Kenosha, on Lake Michigan, to Rockford, in Northern Illinois.

Passengers to or from California, Colorado, Utah, Nebraska, the Black Hills, Minnesota, Manitoba, the East, West, North and South, should see that they are furnished tickets by this great line. No other road has Pullman or any other form of hotel car.

Considering the vast area of territory tracked by this road, the number of trains daily running, the freight and passenger business it transacts, its main lines and ramifications, its equipment, its celebrated hotel cars, and in short, the character of its entire outfit, the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad eminently deserves the title of one of our grandest trunk lines.—Daily Graphic, New York, May 21, 1879.

A Rochester Physician's Experience.

R. Calkins, M. D., of Rochester, N. Y., certifies Oct. 6th, 1879, that he has used the Safe Kidney and Liver Cure in his practice for diseases of the kidneys and liver, and the result has been satisfactory in the extreme. He says: "I would now prescribe the same remedy to all similarly afflicted, and you are at liberty to so state in your testimonials."

If a man's word is not as good as his bond, the best thing is to get on without either. If this can't be done, look well to the bond, and treat the word as though it had never been spoken.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

CARE OF CHILDREN IN WINTER.

It may be felt as a hard saying, that at least one-third of the deaths which occur in young children are due to the ignorance or carelessness of mothers and nurses; and yet it is to be feared that the assertion has in it more of truth than exaggeration. Winter is the season in which little children are usually exposed to special dangers.—Says Dr. Hamilton Osgood: "There are no words strong enough to characterize the folly of those parents who think it right to 'harden' their children by forcing them to face the cold insufficiently clad. 'By this means,' a medical writer declares 'children are hardened out of the world.' If it were possible to compute the number of children who lose their lives simply because they are not warmly enough dressed, the statistics would startle fathers and mothers. The death-rate of children in cold climates during winter, especially in Russia, is enormous. In justice to fathers, however," adds the doctor, "it must be said that they are less responsible than mothers for the ill-judged manner in which many children are dressed in winter.

Never let little children go out of doors in winter without being warmly clad. They lose heat rapidly, and easily contract throat and lung affections. Every child should have full suits of underclothing; and especially let the legs and ankles be well protected with thick stockings and leggings. The mother who sends her child out in winter with bare legs is a vain and foolish mother, and cruel to her child. If the doctor does not have to be called in before the winter is over, the case will be an exceptional one. She may have need of the undertaker.

The cold bath in the morning for infants and young children, has done a vast amount of injury. Dr. Osgood, in his little book, "Winter and its Dangers," says: "As for bathing children on rising, especially in winter, I consider nothing more reprehensible. It is slow murder. They may be dry-rubbed at that hour, but bathed, never. This, of course; refers to the full bath, not to the ordinary ablution of head, face and hands. Indeed, it is my firm belief that, save dressing, nothing should be done before breakfast. The toilet completed, we should go straight to the table. In view of our actual physical condition at early morning, how a sane person can advocate the full bath and exercise before is a mystery."

In bathing children during the cold season, the same authority says: "The forenoon hours are the proper time for bathing children. If the hour be inconvenient, unless they are too tired, they may be bathed about fifty or sixty minutes before the evening meal. Food must not be eaten directly after a bath, and it need not be said that neither adults nor children should bathe directly after eating, whatever the season. This would be especially dangerous in winter.

How to Cure Virginia Bacon.

A hog weighing from one hundred and fifty to one hundred and eighty pounds, is the best size for a private family. After it has been killed and cleaned nice, and quite cold, lay the hams on a board with the skin side down: rub over the fleshy part a tablespoon of finely-powdered saltpetre, mixed with a half teacup of brown sugar, to each ham, and about a pint and a half of salt well rubbed in on both sides. If the weather is cold lay the hams in a pickling tub with the skin side downward. Let them remain a month, and after rubbing them over with powdered red or black pepper, mixed with nice molasses, hang them up with the hock side down. Smoke them every dry day with hickory wood and a pod of red pepper. Some leave the hams hanging up, though many prefer taking them down, rubbing them with hickory ashes, and occasionally sunning them. Avoid boiling the hams very fast. Let them boil gently and simmer, never allowing cold water to be added while boiling.

Poor Man's Pudding.

One quart of flour, six eggs beaten well, the whites and yolks separate, a tablespoonful of melted butter, milk for a batter not to thick. Dissolve two-thirds of a teaspoonful of best super-carbonate of soda, and dissolve also two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar.—Add both to the batter and bake quickly. Make the sauce thus: One teacup of butter, two teacups of brown sugar. Work them together till white, add a teaspoon of essence of vanilla; make it up like batter; grate some nutmeg over it.

Nice Tea Cakes.

Three pints of flour, a large spoonful of butter and lard mixed, a teaspoon of goound cinnamon, half of a grated nutmeg, a little pounded mace, three eggs well beaten, two teacups of sugar, two-thirds of a teaspoon of bicarbonate of soda dissolved in sour cream, one teaspoonful of salt; mix smoothly, and roll out moderately thin, as they rise very much.

YOU SHOULD TAKE IT.

In Point of Excellence It is Unsurpassed, and Every Family Will Appreciate it and Enjoy Its Perusal.

Every man should make his home as comfortable and attractive as possible.

A most essential requisite to that end is a good newspaper. The perusal of such a newspaper not only instills in the rising generation a love of home but is a constant incentive to improvement. Simply as an educator, and aside from all other considerations, no parent should forego taking into his family THE DETROIT FREE PRESS.

For the year 1880 we have to offer the standard features which have made THE FREE PRESS the most popular journal in the world, and with such additions as will prove of special interest to Michigan readers.

Addressing more particularly the farmer, we take extreme pains to procure complete and accurate market reports. They embrace farm products of every character, including live stock. The quotations, corrected to the day of publication, from all the leading cities, as well as those of Detroit, are given each week.

A carefully organized system of regular correspondence throughout Michigan will give the readers early and complete intelligence of all happenings in the State.

At this point we wish to remind readers that the best and fullest reports as well as the earliest news of all important affairs, whether happening in Michigan or elsewhere, will be found in THE FREE PRESS. We might refer to the two most recent and terrible disasters in Michigan—the Adrian grand stand horror and the Jackson railroad accident—as examples, reinforced on frequent occasions by accounts of great public events which THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS has laid before its readers in advance of its contemporaries.

No newspaper has brighter or more intelligent editorial comments on the leading topics of the day.

None surpass it in candor; none equal it in literary merit; none approach it in spice, sparkle and vivacity.

Its correspondence by its superior excellence, has attracted great attention, and in this especial department The Free Press is acknowledged to stand at the very front.

Readers of The Free Press will receive through its columns an intelligible idea of new books of merit as they are from time to time published. Liberal extracts and discriminating reviews appear every week.

Attention is given to historical topics, and articles having special reference to our own State are in preparation.

"THE HOUSEHOLD."

Every issue of THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS is accompanied by "The Household," a supplement devoted to social and domestic topics, flower culture, fancy work, toilet and cooking recipes and household matters generally. It is furnished without extra charge, and every purchaser or subscriber to The Weekly Free Press is entitled to receive a copy.

To sum up, all must conclude that The Weekly Free Press and The Household—a supplement which accompanies every issue—though furnished together for $1.50 a year, compare in the amount and excellence of contents with the best of the four dollar magazines.

The Weekly Free Press and "The Household" together are furnished at $1.50 a year.

Liberal premiums, embracing yearly subscriptions to the various magazines, etc., are given for clubs. Address letters to

Montreal Heard From.

R. L. Mosely, of Montreal, Canada, certified Sept. 27, 1879, that he had suffered terribly from dyspepsia, and was completely cured by taking Warner's Safe Bitters. He says: "My appetite is good, and I suffer no inconvenience from eating hearty meals." These Bitters are also a specific for all skin diseases.

WHY HE STOLE.

He had a wife.
His salary was twenty-five hundred dollars per annum.
But she complained.
She wanted a better house,
Better clothes;
Nothing fit to go out in;
No country cottage,
Nor carriage,
Nor front pews,
Nor society.
She coveted a place on the ragged edge of the select five hundred.
She kept it up
Night and day,
And moaned and Groaned and Growled and Wept.
He lacked style, also,
As well as new clothes every six weeks, and various other things.
He knew how his employer made several hundreds daily on the street.
A thousand or so would not be missed for a few hours;
So he took it, went upon the street and won.
She got a seal skin.
He took more and lost.
More to get that back and lost.
More yet.
Defalcation discovered.
He wears the penitentiary check.
Others are going to.
Beware.
But if you win regularly, society won't be hard on you.
But if you lose, society will sit down on you.
Beware.

DISEASED FOWLS.

Procure one pound of wood charcoal, pulverize it coarsely, and mix with it half a pound of table salt. To half a pint of this mixture, add one quart of meal and bran, half and half. Mix well and feed to about six or seven fowls. Procure some hard coal screenings and place within reach. Feed occasionally a few oats. Always keep some old iron in the drinking water; give all the out-door exercise you possibly can; even chase them around a little. Place plenty of straw for them to scratch among for exercise. Throw some small grain among this to encourage scratching. Above all, give pure air and keep perfectly clean. I find a little kerosene—the commoner the better—to be a fine preventive of disease and lice of all kinds. Smear this all along the perches; also under the straw in the laying boxes. This is is a disinfectant and deodorizer also. On cold days be careful; on warm ones give them air.

The best disinfectant.
The following are some of the advantages obtained by using Lewis' 98 Per Cent. Powdered Lye:

First. It is packed in an iron can with a slip or removable lid, easily taken off and leaving the contents exposed, thereby saving the trouble, annoyance, and danger (from flying particles), as with other Lyes, which, being sold in tin cans, must be broken with a hammer to get the Lye out.
Second. It being a fine powder, you can remove the lid and pour out all the contents, being always ready for use.
Third. A teaspoonful or more can be used, as in water-softening, scrubbing, etc., and the lid returned to the can, and thereby save the balance of contents. With other Lyes all must be dissolved at once and used in a short time, or the strength is gone.
Fourth. Absolute purity. Free from all adulterations.
Fifth. The best Soap can be made in from ten to twenty minutes with this Lye.
Sixth. No failure is possible in making Soap with this Lye when the simple directions given are followed.

Ninth. This Lye is 33 per cent. stronger than any other Lye or Potash.
Tenth. One to two teaspoonfuls will soften a tub of the hardest water.
Eleventh. One teaspoonful will thoroughly cleanse Sinks, Drains, or Closets.

THE PRESENT RAILROAD STATUS.

The Toledo and Milwaukee railroad project is gaining new momentum every day. As the people are becoming more familiar with the facts they see clearly that the road is very certain to be built within a few months, that it will form a good through line between Toledo and Grand Haven, and will be a great benefit to the towns and villages through which it passes, and that Tecumseh must not lose this road if she would retain her present business position.

A few words will show our readers what has been done during the past week.

Letters have been received from Addison and Cambridge, which show that those places are earnestly at work, and the news from Franklin is very favorable.

Last Friday evening a meeting was held in the Culbertson school house, north east of the village. Philip Kehoe was called to the chair and A. G. Hall was chosen secretary. The matter was then fully presented to the meeting, and several farmers in that vicinity spoke in favor of the road: Mr. Benedict, A. G. Hall, Philip Kehoe, Minor Davidson and others. Philip Kehoe was added to the committee already appointed for East Tecumseh, and the committee are making a canvass this week.

At a railroad meeting held in Ridgeway, at the office of Wm. H. Arner, on Monday, Jan. 20, a large number of the inhabitants of this vicinity were in attendance, and listened to rousing speeches by S. C. Stacy and W. F. Baxter. D. W. Lore, one of the committee on right of way, made a verbal report on what had been done. A proposition to receive pledges to the general fund was made, and seemed to arouse those in attendance and gave promise of securing the needful amount necessary to secure the railroad at this point. The committee have been at work since with flattering success, and there is no doubt but that with good fare work, Ridgeway will secure the required amount by the middle of next week.

Monday evening a committee meeting was held at the Council Building in this village. Reports from canvassers were made, and much enthusiasm was manifested for the project.—The sub-committees appointed here in the village are getting down to solid work now and every day swells the aggregate of the subscriptions.

On Tuesday evening the farmers in the Tilton district, in Raisin, took a turn at the railroad crank. John Hanley was elected chairman of the meeting, and E. L. Russell secretary. The Tecumseh delegation present set forth the subject in detail after which remarks were made by C. C. Tefft, J. B. Colvin, John Hanley, Geo. Hanford, Samuel Satterthwaite and others. They all favored the road and most of them pledged liberal aid in the way of donations. It was arranged to have a meeting of the committee last evening, and they will proceed at once to canvass the town West of the river. The committee at present consists of Jno. Hanley, J. B. Colvin, A. B. Bangs, and E. L. Russell.—Next Saturday evening a meeting will be held in the McLain school house, East of the river, and a separate committee will be appointed to work in that quarter of the town.—The farmers are fast waking up to the importance of this enterprise. They see plainly that they will be greatly benefited by such a railroad.

Toledo is also waking up to the necessity of this railroad, and she will certainly raise the quota allotted to her to secure the prize. From the Toledo Blade of last Friday we gather the particulars of a meeting held there on the previous evening in the interest of this road:

An important meeting was held at the Boody House last night, by the Joint Committees appointed by the Merchants and Manufacturers' Exchange, and the Produce Exchange, to consider ways and means to secure the aid necessary to insure the building of the Toledo & Milwaukee Railway to this City. Messrs. Charles A. King, Perry Crabbs, V. Hamilton, V. H. Ketcham, F. J. King, William Baker, C. L. Luce, H. S. Walbridge, and Silas Baldwin, of these Committees, were present and had a full conference with J. A. Latcha, President of the T. & M. Railway Company.—Mr. Charles A. King was appointed Chairman of the meeting, and in presenting the object and purposes of this conference, made many important statements as to the present status of the trade of Toledo, and very forcibly presented to the consideration of the Committee, not only the desirability of this new railroad to Toledo, but its absolute necessity if Toledo is to maintain its prestige and advance in importance as a commercial center.

Mr. King gave figures showing that as traffic is now tending, and especially in the grain trade, it required the most strenuous effort of the railroads centering in Toledo from the southwest, to control the grain to this market. The most graphic illustration given to demonstrate this fact, was the statement that Baltimore and Philadelphia, and especially Baltimore, are rapidly coming to the front as the export markets for grain, and in consequence of this the roads running directly east from the great trade centers of the Mississippi Valley are diverting the grain from the Wabash and other railroads feeding Toledo, directly east to Philadelphia and Baltimore, and to show conclusively that this is the fact, Mr. King states that for the year closing October last, Baltimore had increased its exports of wheat and corn over 1878 by 52½ per cent., and that Philadelphia had increased its exports in the same time, of the same cereals, over 20 per cent., and that New York, out of the vastly increased exportation of 1879 over 1878 had merely secured the beggarly increase of 3½ per cent., thus conclusively showing that the Southeastern ports are rapidly drawing away the export traffic of the grain of the West. In view of this fact that Philadelphia and Baltimore, and especially the latter, are thus looming up so strongly as export centers, it is absolutely essential for Toledo to place herself in such a position that she will be upon a natural route from the grain-producing sections of the west to those Cities and thus insure her being able to handle on equal terms the grain tending to Baltimore, as well as to New York and New England. As the entire State of Michigan is a large producer of wheat, and as Baltimore is making a specialty of wheat export, it is clear that a line of railway from the northwestern portion of that State to Toledo passing through the heart of the white wheat country in Michigan, must offer to Toledo the very best facilities for controlling the shipment of this grain to the export Cities on the Atlantic coast, and especially to Baltimore. By building the Toledo & Milwaukee Railway, Toledo could secure a large and valuable traffic, that must naturally pass through the portals and thus enable her citizens and their capital to handle that traffic and increase the business of the city. This is of the utmost importance to Toledo. But in addition to this Mr. King presented the fact that the lumber markets of Muskegon and Grand Haven would thus be directly open to the manufacturers and dealers of Toledo, in competition with the Saginaw regions, and thus insure this most important commodity being procured at Toledo at the most reasonable rates and in the greatest quantity desired. Various other points were fully explained, among others that the coal centering here could be interchanged over the Toledo & Milwaukee Railway for consumption in the densely populated State of Michigan, and lumber returned on the coal cars, thus insuring a profitable interchange of the bulky and valuable articles of commerce through this city.

The greatest interest was manifested by all the gentlemen present, as the importance of the enterprise was made manifest to them, and it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that Toledo must make every exertion to secure this road. Those present agreed they would devote their own time to this end and that they would recommend that some person should be appointed by the two Exchanges to devote his entire time for the next 30 days to the effort to raise the aid required from Toledo. A subcommittee was appointed consisting of Chas. A. King and H. S. Walbridge, and it was moved that Messrs. Carrington and Baldwin, the Presidents respectively of the Produce Exchange, and Merchants and Manufacturers Exchange, should be added to this sub-committee, and be requested to confer fully with Mr. Latcha and prepare for active prosecution of the work to be done in Toledo.

The prospects of our securing this important railroad, if our citizens generally manifest the same interest shown by the gentlemen composing these committees, are exceedingly good, and we trust the work will be pushed energetically, as its importance demands.

SCHOOL LAW.

Notes on the Law Respecting Text Books.

Section 59, of the general school laws, provides that the district board "shall prescribe a uniform list of text books to be used in the schools, but text books once adopted shall not be changed within two years, except by the consent of a majority of the voters at some regular meeting." The same section also confers on the board the power to establish "needful regulations" to enforce its action. The duty of the district board in the matter of text books is, therefore, 1, to prescribe a uniform list of text books to be used in the schools; 2, to secure the introduction of these books; and 3, to see that the books are retained in the school for the period of two years, or until further action in conformity with law. The law makes these positive duties of the district board, and if members neglect or refuse to perform them, they incur the penalties prescribed for neglect of duties. The district board must make the adoption for the period of two years, and it is in force until legally changed; but any agreement fixing a longer period than two years has no binding force. The district board as such cannot purchase or contract to purchase text books for the ordinary use of the school, and any such contract or agreement is void. School officers, by a cheerful performance of their duties under the law, and by carefully refraining from exceeding their prerogatives, will avoid a prolific source of discord in the district and of personal annoyance and liability to themselves.

AMONG OUR EXCHANGES.

The President's Mistake.

Cincinnatti Enquirer.—There are three newspapers in Pennsylvania in favor of Hayes for next President.—Mr. Hayes can now see the mistake he made in not appointing more editors to Post offices.

Nip and Tuck.

New York Tribune.—It is nip and tuck between "Governor" Smith and "Acting-Governor" Lamson as to which of them has had the most brief and brilliant public career. Smith has wasted a message, but otherwise he is no worse off than his predecessor.

What Makes the Difference.

Chicago News.—The Republicans who stole Louisiana and Florida are patriots. The Democrats and Greenbackers who attempted to steal Maine are swindlers. It makes all the difference in the world what party you belong to when you defraud the people.

[illegible] State Taxation.

Detroit [illegible] Press.—New Jersey is practically out of debt, and Governor McClellan recommends the removal of the State tax, the State funds being ample for all public purposes without any tax. Michigan, too, is practically out of debt, but the Republican State government declines to take any step which will give the people the freedom from taxation which ought to be one of the results of such freedom.

Reduce the Army.

New York Sun.—Now that Gen. Sherman and the Military Ring are demanding a virtual increase in the army of five thousand men, it is well to look back and to compare the past with the present state of that costly machine, which consumes in one form or another about forty millions a year of taxes. What do the people get for this enormous expenditure? A great deal of fuss and feathers, and little else.

The Rival Icebergs.

Washington Post.—Two appreciative Virginians, writing from different sections of their State, request us to ask Charles Francis Adams to make them a visit, in order to help out the fast falling ice crop. It is our candid opinion that John Sherman would serve them better. Men have been known to freeze while standing on the sunny side of Mr. Sherman, even when basking in his smile. We have no influence with John, however, and we have both forgotten and mislaid Mrs. Jenks' address.

Who Owns the Money?

Philadelphia Times.—There are in Maine two or three thousand dollars which nobody seems to own. The money it seems is at present in the hands of some Fusion members of the Legislature, who agree that it was given them as a bribe to desert their party. They are willing to do anything with it that the Legislature may direct, and it has been suggested that it be turned into the State Treasury and left as a permanent monument of infamy, so to say. A portion of it might also be used in getting up something suitable to the memory of Ex-Governor Garcelon.

Result of Mixing Politics and Religion.

New York Tribune.—The Universalist minister of Biddeford has been voted out of his pulpit by a majority of his parishioners because he holds a seat in Garcelon's legislature. He was not counted in, but was regularly elected on the Fusion ticket, but his congregation think he has disgraced himself and his church by consenting to remain in a body which has so many bad odors clinging to it. Thus the usual result of a mixture of politics and religion—injury to the latter, has happened. If the Rev. Mr. Wales had kept out of politics he might never have doubted the truth of the faith he preaches. Perhaps he doesn't now, but may be more than ever convinced that for him, at least, there is sufficient punishment for transgressions in this world without any whatever in the world to come.

Ended in a Roaring Farce.

Detroit Evening News.—The Maine comedy has ended in a roaring farce. When they were entirely in the wrong the fusionists were full of courage and were loud in their boasts of how they would shed the last drop of their blood before surrendering the power they had stolen. When the course of events had put them at least technically in the right, they surrendered at discretion—"folded their tents like the Arabs and silently stole away." The same may be said of the other side.—When they were strong in their clear rights they permitted the fusionists to organize the legislature, and then proceeded to circumvent them by a trick. It was not the supreme court decision that made the fusionists vanish. It was the bayonets of Lord Protector Chamberlain. It was he who gave the state house to the republicans, and it was his recognition which made Davis the de facto governor. The government of Maine is now settled and civil war there is avoided, not because those in the wrong were virtuous enough to yield willingly to the right, but because right or wrong, they were too cowardly to fight.

THE music at the Masquerade will probably be the best Tecumseh has ever had.

THE Semi-Annual Associational Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Societies and the Mission Bands of the Lenawee Association will be held at Tecumseh on Wednesday, Jan. 28th. Services at 2 and 7 P. M. Interesting exercises have been arranged for the afternoon, consisting of reports, addresses, and a paper by Mrs. Conley. Also for the evening, recitation, singing, question drawer, and whatever will help forward our Mission Bands, which, it is hoped, will be largely represented.

The Masquerade Party.

The Tecumseh B. B. A. have completed their arrangements for a masquerade ball, which will take place at the Opera House, on Tuesday evening, February 3d, prox. The music will be furnished by Melversted's celebrated double quadrille band of Toledo, in full uniform. Arrangements will be made to furnish costumes at a reasonable rental, so that parties desiring to attend can be fully accommodated in that direction. The committee in charge of the party are T. C. Cummins, S. A. James, and L. P. Tribou. Bill only $1.50. The invitations are just out and the indications are favorable for a large and brilliant party.

To and Fro in London.

On Tuesday evening next, Jan. 27, Mr. John R. Clark will deliver his characteristic, entertaining and descriptive lecture, entitled "To and Fro in London." The lecture will be given at the Opera House for the benefit of the M. E. Sunday School. Mr. Clark has already delivered this lecture eighty times in Michigan. He will sing songs of other days, among which are Up a Tree, Wait for the Turn of the Tide, Whistlin' Barney, etc. As this is the first time his own friends and neighbors have had the opportunity of hearing this lecture, we have no doubt they will give him a full house. The price of admission is placed at a very low figure. Single tickets, 15 cents; two tickets, 25 cts.; children, 10 cents.

MIRROR OF IRELAND.

See what one of our exchanges says of Sullivan's Mirror of Ireland, which is advertised to be at the Opera House on Friday evening, Jan. 23d:

"A very delightful entertainment was given by the Sullivan Comedy Company last evening. Mr. Sullivan is a capital dialect comedian, a fair singer and a dancer of exceptional merit; his specialties excited rapturous admiration, particularly his rendition of "Muldoon, the Solid Man" in which he is fully the equal of the much vaunted Pat Rooney. Mrs. Sullivan is a very clever serio-comic vocalist, and a fine dancer, and ably supported her husband in the comedy portion of the entertainment. Miss Emmett presided at the piano, and several Irish ballads with nice taste and expression. The moving views of Irish scenery are the finest we have seen in many years. An Irishman at our elbow (a man born on the Emerald Isle and who is familiar with nearly every scene depicted upon the canvas) was enthusiastic in praise of the life-like character of the representations. Mr. Vernon, as lecturer and tourist imparted the necessary information in a satisfactory manner."

WHELAN & Co., Costumers, of Detroit, are expected to furnish the costumes for the Masquerade.

THE date of the masquerade ball has been fixed upon. It will be given on Tuesday evening, Feb. 3d, 1880.

ED. MERRITT has opened the retail department of his cigar store, and is now prepared to serve his friends in first-class style.

SEVERAL Adrian officers and attorneys were in town last Tuesday and Wednesday, attending the VanAntwerp examination.

THE report of the Northern Lenawee Farmers' Club was received too late for insertion this week. The "Farmers' Page" was in type before it came to hand. It will appear next week.

COL. FITZSIMMONS returned home from his Washington and Southern tour last week. He enjoyed the trip very much and enters upon his business duties on his return, with renewed zeal.

THERE will be a railroad meeting in the McLain school house, south of Comfort's brick yard in Raisin, next Saturday evening. The farmers in that vicinity are requested to turn out and hear the matter discussed.

REV. ALEXANDER CAPRON, rector of Christ Church, Adrian, on Sunday, announced to the congregation that he intended to leave them, having accepted a call at Port Jarvis, N. Y. The Times says he will go on the 28th of February.

JOS. S. KIES, of Clinton, was in town last Friday, and favored our office with a little visit. He is on the road most of the time traveling for the Clinton Woolen Mills, and he speaks in glowing terms of their large and lucrative business.

A MEETING of the general railroad committee will be held to-morrow, Friday, evening, at the Council Building, to receive reports from the canvassing committees, and transact such other business as may be necessary.—A full attendance is desired.

MERCHANTS' HOTEL is undergoing a thorough renovation, and when the improvements are completed, we understand that W. H. Sink, the landlord of the Pioneer House, will take possession under a new lease, the lease of Frank Whiting having expired.

IT was expected that Bishop Harris, the new Episcopal Bishop of this Diocese, would be in Tecumseh to-morrow evening, but circumstances have rendered a postponement of his visitation necessary. He will be here within a few weeks, of which due notice will be given.

A NEW swindling game is being worked on some of the farmers. The swindler is an agent for the sale of cheap grain bags, and the document the farmers sign on making a purchase, generally evolutes into a promissory note. We advise farmers in this vicinity to look out for such chaps.

MR. HIGBY has bought the interest of Vet Erskine in the barber shop, and the latter retires. Mr. Higby will hereafter run the barber shop alone, in the Lilley & Wright block. Vet Erskine has rented the saloon formerly kept by Sutfin & Montague and will run that business in company with Lafe Rowland.

THAT wide-awake temperance paper, the Michigan Truthteller, sends us the handsome "Truthteller Almanac for 1880"—one of the brightest annuals we have seen. The Truthteller is business! Only one dollar a year, and with the HERALD can be had as low as 50 cents. Temperance folks can't afford to do without it.

WE shall, with the first issue in February, establish a real estate column. Advertisements of Real Estate to sell or rent will be groped together in an attractive form, and special rates will be given on long-term contracts. Persons wishing to sell or rent will find it to their advantage to make known their wishes in the HERALD.

THE Masquerade promises to be a brilliant affair.

SEVERAL of our exchanges have something to say about mud.

GUS SLAYTON has a new card on the first page. He offers extra bargains for the next thirty days.

DON'T forget the Masquerade at the Opera House, Tuesday, Feb. 3d. Admission to gallery, 15 cents.

"Nip your cough in the bud," said Horace Greeley, by taking "Dr. Sellers' Cough Syrup." Lose no time in getting a bottle.

THE C. L. Davis combination will appear at the Opera House Jan. 28th. This is said to be one of the best troupes on the road.

AND now R. H. Morrison, the defaulting treasurer of the Odd Fellows, has got into another snarl. His wife has sued for a divorce.

JUD DEPUY, D. Jones, and Jas. M. Jones have poultry on exhibition at the Poultry show, which is held at Ann Arbor this week.

BURDETTE, the Hawkeye man, will lecture in Blissfield on Saturday of next week. He is one of the lecturers in their regular course.

CALENDARS are now quite plenty in this market. The supply fully equals the demand, and the tendency of prices is downward.

THE regular drill of Co. C will be held on Thursday evening of next week, as the Opera House will be otherwise occupied on Wednesday evening.

ZEBINA S. TAYLOR brought into our office a lilac twig, cut this morning, which had fresh buds on it nearly half an inch in length. How is that for January?

OUR friend, David Woodward of Clinton, is all on the square. At the Masonic Grand Council just held in Jackson he was elected to the position of M. I. G. M.

John C. Sharp of Jackson has been selected as the supervisor of the census in this district. He has not received his formal appointment but will get it very soon.

AND now Detroit is again agitating the Eel River railroad project. The fever is growing, and they may get up enough enthusiasm to held a public meeting and pass some resolutions.

JOHN SUTFIN has bought the vacant lot between Wright's drug store and Anderson's grocery store, and will erect a brick block on the same during the coming spring and summer.

ON what line shall the new railroad cross the corporation is the principal topic of discussion here now. It will not cross on any line until the railroad itself is secured. Catch the bird first, gentlemen, and then we can settle the question as to where we shall put it.

THE railroad committees of Tecumseh and the adjoining towns must put in lively work this week and next. There will be a joint meeting here for all the towns in Lenawee county in the early part of week after next. The exact date of this meeting will be made known soon.

PHYSICIANS for the poor. The Superintendents of the Poor have appointed the following physicians for the poor, at the salary given below: For Tecumseh, Samuel Catlin, $40; Palmyra, J. H. Reynolds, $30; Blissfield, Newcomb & Parker, $72; Hudson, George Chapman, $70; Seneca, H. S. Wyman, $40; Clinton, J. L. Tuttle, $34.

NEXT Monday Will J. Kies will start East to buy a full stock of clothing and gents' furnishing goods, which he will place on sale in the Hewitt store, which is now being refitted and fixed up expressly for his use. Mr. Kies is one of our most enterprising young men. He has had six years' experience as a retail clerk and four years' experience in wholesaling, and hence ought to be well fitted to conduct a business of this kind. He expects to open his store about the 10th of February next.

A FARMERS' Institute is in session this week at Manchester. Their program which appeared in last week's Enterdrise is a good one, and we have no doubt their session will be well attended and be profitable. Among the papers to be read are these: Farmers' Boys, The Farmer in Society, Hedge Fences, Education, Horticulture, Home Influence, Economy in the Management of the Farm, General Housekeeping, Best Breeds of Cattle for our Climate, Butter Making, The Horse's Foot, Sheep Husbandry, The Improvement and Tillage of new Land, Manual Labor in our Colleges. The sessions commenced on Monday evening and continued during Tuesday. By the way, wouldn't it be a good plan for the Northern Lenawee Farmers' Club to get up something of this kind? They could organize a good Institute in a month's time.

THE PEOPLE VS. VAN ANTWERP.

Examination of the Defendant before Justice Merritt—The Testimony.

The examination of W. C. Van Antwerp for complicity in the assault upon Dr. Hause, on the evening of Dec. 12th, was commenced before Justice Merritt last Tuesday morning. Prosecuting Attorney Underwood appeared in person for the People, and J. A. Stacy appeared for the Defendant.—The examination was quite lengthy, and continued during the day Tuesday and also yesterday.

We present below the salient points of the evidence as given by the different witnesses. The first witness sworn was

ELMER HAUSE, who said:

I reside in Tecumseh and have since 1862. On Dec. 12th last I was living on Shawnee street, north-east from the main corners. Was down town and started to go home about 10 o'clock and before the passenger train went North. I was last in Wooden's meat market. When I left there I went North on Evans street, nearly to first corner, then turned back and went to Baker's Drug store; from there went back along East side of Evans street, by Hayden's warehouse. Freight cars were standing on the side track there.

When nearly opposite the North end of the warehouse, I heard a noise behind me, I looked back and saw two men together upon the walk and 15 or 20 feet distant. Could see that their faces were towards me but could not tell whether they were moving or not. Supposing they were neighbors I took no further notice of them, as I was near a stone in front of me and had to look to see where to step, I heard the whistle of the passenger train. I do not think I went more than ten feet further after I looked around, before I was struck on the back of the head. Think I was caught hold of and a hand placed over my mouth when I was struck. I lost conciousness and when my sight come to me again thought I saw reflection of a light on the iron rail of the railroad track. I was lying about 20 feet from where I was struck and called for help. Do'nt remember hearing the train after I was struck; cannot tell with what weapon I was struck, but supposed it to be a stone. I had $38.50 in money on my person; one $20 bill, three fives, three silver dollars and a half dollar. The bills were in a wallet in my hip pocket, the silver in my left front pants pocket. Had a gold watch and chain upon my person. When I first came to I felt for my watch and found it all right. Noticed that my overcoat was unbuttoned, I attempted to button it and found my right hand seriously injured.

I thought no more of my money till I got home; my wife then examined my pockets and found it gone. Had sold out my business here and was preparing to go to Kansas City about the first of January.

[A part of a pocket-book was here offered in evidence.]

The pocket-book here shown I recognize as a part of the one I had in my pocket on that night. The part in which the $20 bill was folded is missing; the three five dollar bills were in the part here shown. I was not able to identify the two men I saw behind me before I was struck. Don't think I would know them were I to see them again; a freight car was about opposite where I saw the two men. There were two or three cars there and I do not think I had got fully past the cars when I was struck; all that I noticed about the two persons was that one was taller than the other, and the tallest one had lighter clothes on.

Cross-examination.—Do not remember how many cars there were on Hayden's side-track that night; did not notice particularly. When I go home by way of Evans street I generally go past Hayden's warehouse and across Military Square; was on my way home when I was struck. The blow I received did not break the skin or scalp, but bruised the neck and shoulder. Was around town most all that day and noticed one man scrutinizing me pretty closely. After dark in the evening saw two men standing on the railroad track near Strong & McNair's store; as I passed one of them asked me what time the train went North that night, when I halted long enough to answer them and then passed on. It was too dark to recognize them fully, and the taller man had on lighter colored clothes, then the other man, but I took them to be strangers. I noticed that one of them was taller than the other. The shorter one followed behind me as far as Whitenack's store, where I noticed he was eyeing me sharply.—Thought nothing of it until after the occurrence. I went into Whitenack's store, and as I went out again this person stood in the door-way. Think I should recognize him if I saw him again; have not seen him since I was hurt. I am not positive that I saw the train. Did not realize that the train was coming upon me when I lay there and the train went through. Cannot tell who first came to my assistance; the first man I recognized was Mr. Cotton. Know the defendant by sight, and have frequently met him upon the street, but have no further acquaintance with him. I should think that the two men I saw on the corner in the evening would compare favorably in dress, size, etc., with the two men I saw just before I was struck. In my judgment both of these men were larger men than the defendant.

Question.—State whether in your opinion the defendant here is the person who assaulted you?

Ans.—I do not think he was.

Answer objected to. Objection sustained and answer stricken out of testimony.

I do not think it was three minutes from the time I was assaulted until the train passed.

Further re-direct and cross-examination elicited nothing new, except a few details about the manner of the assault and the two men he saw behind him. I think that the shorter one of those two men was about my own height, and the other considerable taller, but could not tell their height within two or three inches.

I should not think I could tell with accuracy whether these two men were the two men I saw near McNair's store, but I should think they would compare favorably. Don't know that I could be positive, but it is my impression that they were about like the men I saw there, in size, color of dress, etc.

JOSEPH VOGLBACHER was the next witness sworn. He is the clerk of the Goodyear House in Manchester, and his testimony related to a conversation he heard at the Hotel one afternoon between the Defendant and Miss Britton and Miss Justice. The talk was in the sitting room of the hotel. Miss Justice asked him what made him "own up." He said he didn't.—She said he did "own up" on the way up there. He said he didn't know what should make him say so because he didn't do it. Said he was at home at half past seven. Miss Britton told him not to drink any more, as he might get in a party some time that would squeal on him. She finally asked him what made him own up on the way up there. He said he didn't know what should make him own up because he did not do it.

Cross-examination.—It was between two and three o'clock in the afternoon when Defendant came to the hotel.—I thought he was drunk and in pretty bad shape. Could not tell whether the women had been drinking or not. Miss Justice paid the bill. He was out to take a walk with Britton, and on his return he seemed considerable straighter than when he first came.

ALBERT A. KENNEDY testified that he saw the defendent on the evening of Dec. 12th near the Keysor and Sutfin block on Evans street in company with Chas. Jones and a third person about half past nine o'clock.

ROBERT O'ROW testified that he was on the sidewalk near Morrison's shop when the train went North on that evening. As he got near the Hotel he heard Dr. Hause "holler"; went to him and found him trying to get up on his hands and knees. He was near the railroad track. I was not acquainted with the Doctor then and did not know who he was.

EDWARD H. MERRITT testified to a conversation he heard by defendant in the lock-up in Tecumseh soon after his arrest.

S. H. NIBLACK sworn, and testified that he saw the Defendant in Arnold Bros. Bakery about eight o'clock in the evening of Dec. 12th. He was in there with Chas. Jones and Jim. Averill.

FRED. KNIGHT testified to his finding a pocket book on the day after New Year's, opposite the first house North of the Pioneer Hotel. Dan. Archer and two fellows from Monroe were with him.

DANIEL ARCHER sworn. He stated that he was present with Fred Knight when a pocket book was found, which Knight testified to. (Book shown to witness.) It was just about such a pocket book as this. I had it in my hands. Found it in front of Jim. Cole's house, on the outside of the sidewalk near a tree. The pocket-book was wet; did not examine it to see whether it was wet through. After we had walked away a few steps I threw it away to my left.

MARK E. FESSENDEN being sworn said: I found the pocket-book on the evening of Jan. 5th, inst. It was on Shawnee street on west side of cross-walk, which runs north and south, and in the ditch, which runs East and West. I took the book and gave it to Dr. Hause.

JAMES R. CAIRNES testified to his going to Manchester to see Vogelbacher, and also to the conversation of Defendant in the lock-up shortly after his arrest, in which he stated that he went home about half past seven that evening and remained home all night.

E. H. MERRITT was re-called and said Defendant told him they stopped once on the way to Manchester and got a bottle of whisky at Fisher's saloon in Clinton.

The examination was then adjourned till Jan. 31st, inst. The above is only a brief abstract of the testimony, but it is given as fully as our space will admit of.

DIED

TERRY—On the 15th inst., at the Pontiac Asylum for the Insane, John F. Terry, aged 58 years.

The deceased began his professional life in Tecumseh, where he practiced successfully as an occulist for several years. He afterwards removed to Jackson and from thence to Toledo, but has made his home in Detroit for the last twenty years. He had a large circle of friends and acquaintances in Tecumseh during his residence here, many of whom are now living, and they will sincerely sympathize with the widow in her bereavement.

McNAIR—January 13, 1880, Amanda C., widow of the late James McNair, in the 44th year of her age.

Gentle, kindly thoughtful for others, cheerful, through weary months of suffering, she is at rest. While we mourn our loss, we rejoice in the hope that she has reached her eternal home where "hands clasp forever."

WOODARD—At Eddyville, Iowa, Jan. 15, 1880, of Heart Disease, Mr. Hampton A., son of Josiah Woodard, aged 45 years, 10 months.

Deceased was born in Vienna, Oneida county, N. Y., where he spent his youthful days. He came to Tecumseh in 1852, where he resided for several years. He went to Eddyville in 1856, where he has since made it his home. He leaves a wife and five sons, an aged father, (very feeble,) mother, brothers and sisters to mourn his loss. May a kind heavenly father comfort them in their affliction.

Good Words for John R. Clark.

A late number of the Battle Creek Journal has this to say about the lecture of John R. Clark "To and Fro in London":

We venture the assertion that a more delighted audience never assembled in our city or departed better satisfied than that which gathered at Centennial hall on Monday evening, and listened to John R. Clark's most celebrated lecture, which he gave for the 77th time in this State, and which has everywhere received the most flattering press notices, which it creditably merits.

The hall was comfortably filled; an unusual number of children were also present; at our right were seated a "corporal's guard of the 'coming men,' numbering thirteen, all ranging from 7 to 10 years of age, yet they appeared to take in the spirit of the address with proper appreciation; and their little hands were often the first to clap applause to Mr. Clark's brilliant witticisms.

Adrian Times.—Tecumseh seems bound to commit suicide. She is urging on a railroad scheme that will build up smaller towns around her, but will ruin Tecumseh.

If Tecumseh should secure this railroad she will be the liviest corpse in this section of the State.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

CLINTON.

"Big Frank" has gone to work in the factory.

Mrs. John P. Silvers is suffering terribly from cancer in the mouth.

Miss Ida Davis made a short visit here last Friday.

Mr. Alonzo Clark has sold the saw and grist mills at Newburg to Jacob Eislinger for $8,000.

The Red Ribbon social at Andrew McDermot's last Friday night was in every respect a most enjoyable affair. The number in attendance is variously estimated at from one to three hundred persons. Refreshments consisting of nuts, pop-corn, apples, etc., were freely passed, and about ten o'clock the crowd dispersed, expressing themselves as highly pleased with the evening's entertainment, and also wishing a bright and prosperous future to McDermot and family.

Rowland & Lewis, successors to E. F. Muir, in the meat market, have added to their stock of tobacco, canned fruit, confectionary, etc., a large line of groceries and provisions.

The Clinton Woolen Mills have about abandoned the manufacture of cassimeres for the retail trade, and are filling large orders for jobbing houses in Rochester and Chicago. The change is an important one, as it will avoid employing so many traveling salesmen, and the consequent risk in selling to small irresponsible dealers.

The "Vaudeville Combination" of Ann Arbor held forth at the Town Hall on Monday and Tuesday evenings of this week. We have heard but little in its praise, and are half inclined to believe that the "combination" as a whole, savors a little of the "fizzle."

B. G. Swift has bought the house and lot known as the Congregational Parsonage in this village. We have not learned whether he intends to turn preacher and occupy it himself, or make some necessary repairs and lease it. Either would be Clinton's gain.

Dr. and Mrs. A. F. Tuttle leave this morning for the Pacific coast.

Self Evident Improvement.

CLINTON, Jan. 24, 1880.

GENTLEMEN OF THE QUILL:

Is this sheet the Tecumseh HERALD? Yes! Why, "It is an old friend with a new face." Well, but the change is not for purposes of fraud and delusion, but to add to the gratification of the reader, and to indicate the enterprise and generosity of the publisher. Both these results are certainly reached by the present admirable arrangement. The improvement in this weekly is so self evident that the proprietor is to be commended, while in consequence, the periodical itself must become a general favorite. Its form is convenient, its type legible, its contents impartial and respectable.

A CONSTANT READER.

RIDGEWAY.

That dangerous hole in the crossing opposite the P. O. has been repaired.

The chandeliers in the M. E. church will last a great while, as they are used now.

A match game of ball is to come off on Saturday next, (weather permitting) between Macon Grange Hall nine and nine Ridgewayites.

We have to note the death of Eva, daughter of Chas. F. Smith, on Saturday morning, 24th. The funeral took place at the M. E. church on Sunday morning, and was largely attended.

The Christian denomination are taking subscriptions for the building of a new church on their property on the turnpike. It will be a "brick veneer," 36x54 feet, with basement. The project has been liberally patronized, and the funds will be forthcoming without much difficulty.

William Andrews discovered dogs among his sheep on last Sunday afternoon—and for once Wm. ceased to smile. Taking down his shot gun he took to the field. By the time he arrived on the ground one sheep had been torn to pieces, and another caught. Wm. got in a couple of shots and two of the dogs went under. These dogs belonged to Hank Taylor, and he says they did; and why were the taxes not paid on them?

The announcement that there would be a railroad meeting in this village drew a large crowd. The meeting was addressed by G. P. Waring, Frank DePuy, Nelson Miller, and others. Everybody seemed to get enthused, and several subscriptions were quietly taken. It was thought necessary, owing to the amount of territory, the limited time and the almost impassable state of the roads, to increase the committee force, which was done by adding several good workers.

BROOKLYN.

The ghost of the Clark's Lake blacksmith shop did not materialize Saturday night as was expected, though about one hundred people assembled to see the show. The conditions were not favorable. One reason was the owner of the place forbade any more such appearances, and another was too much moonlight. Besides these, several of the old boys of Brooklyn, who are well acquainted with such spirits, went to join the circle. It is curious how quick Abe Wood and a few such mediums unearthed the mystery, but it is thought they are congenial. The haunted shop has been drawing crowds for several weeks past, and has really been a scare to the timid. People from Jackson and places still farther off have come to hear the ring of the phantom anvil. The boys that hammered, offered fabulous sums to any one who would stay in the house alone the entire night, and took turns in accepting the offer, and jumping through the window when they had bravely fired the last shot in their revolvers at the shadowy visitant.

I suppose if they should play the game till the first of April they would have an audience, but it has been slightly interrupted by a temperance lecturer that has given excitement a twist in the current. A woman, very much informed, has appeared and made a few men weep by rehearsing a dime novel and confessing her faults. As I am never willing to own mine, I did not go to hear the revelation, and accepted a second-hand version.

There is little doubt among even common sinners that temperance is an exotic, germinated in common sense, but I doubt its growth being enhanced by language more forcible than the family needs, except when stoves are regulated.

We are growing better or cunning, I don't know which, but the village ordinance authorizing the arrest and imprisonment of any boy less than twenty-one years of age, caught whiling away his leisure hours in saloons, has not resulted in any capture but ghosts.

PEARLIE.

EAST TECUMSEH.

Notwithstanding the terrible condition of the roads the social at Mr. Benedict's was largely attended, and a grand good time enjoyed by all.

STATE PIONEER MEETING.

The annual meeting of the State Pioneer Society will be held at Lansing, in Representative Hall, commencing on Wednesday Feb. 4th at 2 o'clock P. M., and continuing through the evening of the 5th. The program will consist of vocal and instrumental music; address of the president; the usual reports of officer; interesting papers from

C. D. Randall, Coldwater, on The Pottawattamies.

O. S. Burgess, Richmond, Early Settlement of Macomb county.

Time will also be set apart for five minute speeches, reminiscences, &c.

Reduced rates have been secured at all the leading hotels in Lansing.

Arrangements have been made with the principal railroads leading to Lansing, to sell tickets to Lansing and return for two cents per mile each way.

GLEANINGS FROM THE COUNTY PRESS.

Hudson has a Wolverine Literary Society.

Blissfield will soon have presented there the cantata of Queen Esther.

Blissfield proposes to masquerade also. Her party is fixed for Feb. 5th.

Prof. Swing will lecture in Blissfield on the "Useful and the Beautiful," on Feb. 22d next.

Bro. Cross, of the Adrian Journal, feels happy. A man called on him the other day and paid a subscription which had been running for nine years.

Stock in the hub and spoke factory in Hudson is getting quite low, in consequence of the very bad roads this winter. They have any amount of stock purchased, but it is impossible, in the present condition of the roads to get it to the factory.

Hudson Post: Harry Dickerson, bartender of the Comstock House, pleaded guilty last Saturday to the charge of not keeping the bar of said Comstock House closed after the hour of ten o'clock, p. m., on the night of the 24th of last month, and was sentenced to ten days imprisonment in the county jail, and to pay a fine of twenty-five dollars and costs, amounting to twenty-one dollars and sixty cents.—He was taken to jail Sunday morning. The fine and costs are not yet paid.

Blissfield Advance: Oscar Graig, of Palmyra, was arrested by Marshal Burch, Tuesday evening, at Rhody Brockway's saloon. He had left his family a week previous, his wife being sick. A complaint was made on the 14th inst., by Mrs. Craig's father and warrant issued by Esquire Demming, of Palmyra.

Hudson Post: George Jackson, of Wheatland, died suddenly Monday of this week, from heart disease, from which he had been a sufferer for y'rs, although his health has not been seriously impaired. He was preparing to go to the woods to work when the final attack came, and he went and laid down on a couch. He lived but a very short time after lying down.—Mr. Jackson was a very estimable citizen, and his sudden death occasions universal sorrow.

Hudson Gazette: The mill continues to grind. To-morrow the venerable proprietor of the Comstock House is to be arraigned for keeping his saloon open on Christmas. His conviction seems probable. Then we shall have the spectacle of a man of 70, who has spent a fortune for the up-building of the town, serving a sentence behind the iron grates for a single violation of a law, which (like many others) is in its most rigid features artfully evaded or openly disregarded with the tacit consent of many communities.

Adrian Press: Mr. Lewis Goodwin, of Blissfield township, gathered last fall, from his hickory orchard not less than 120 bushels of hickory-nuts, 80 bushels of which he sold for one dollar per bushel, and he now has 40 bushels on hand. Until about 10 years ago, Mr. Goodwin was under the impression that other people had as much right to these nuts, gathered on his woodland premises as himself, and was indebted to "Charley Croswell" as the Governor was then known, for information to the contrary. "Charley" told Mr. Goodwin to prosecute the thieves, and offered his services as counsel, but the nut-stealers seeing that Mr. Goodwin was about to assume the war path, desisted from further depredations, and thus it was that while Mr. Goodwin saved his hickory nuts, "Charley" failed to get in a bill for counsel fees.

History of Lenawee County.

The History and Biographical Record of Lenawee Co. is out and the publishers are in Tecumseh this week delivering the work. It is a very creditable exhibit indeed of the early history of the county, and exceeds our anticipations by a large majority.—The book is a large work of 540 pages, substantially bound and well printed. It contains an article on the organization of the county; the Paper on the History of the County, which was read before the State Pioneer Society, by Hon. John J. Adam, Feb. 7, 1878; short articles giving the early history of Tecumseh, Adrian, Adrian College, Blissfield and Hudson; an account of the Black Hawk and Toledo wars, and over three hundred biographical sketches of the oldest pioneers of the county. Tecumseh and the other towns of Northern Lenawee are well represented in the pages. The publishers have succeeded so well in getting up this work that they contemplate issuing a second volume before long.

PERSONS who subscribe for outside papers at the HERALD office must expect a delay of a week or two in receiving their papers. All the large journals are very much crowded during January, and delays are unavoidable.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

TO MYSELF.

Let nothing make thee sad and fretful,
Or too regretful;
Be still,
What God hath ordered must be right,
Then find in it thine own delight
My will.

Why shouldst thou fill to-day with sorrow
About to-morrow,
My heart?
One watches all with care most true,
Doubt not that He will give thee, too,
Thy part.

Only be steadfast, never waver,
Nor seek earth's favor,
But rest;
Thou knowest what God wills, must be
For all his creatures—so for thee—
The best.

THE SCHOOL MASTER'S WIFE.

"Young and handsome?"

"Yes, just as nice as can be."

"Single?"

"Why, of course. He is too young to be married."

"Then let's see who'll catch him," laughed the pert girl of the village.

"You wont," said pretty Jessie Warner.

"And why not, I wonder?"

"Because I—I don't think he's the kind to be caught that way."

"O, you're going to try the coy and retiring young woman, are you?" said Frank. Her name was Frances.

"I'm not going to try anything," was the response. "He has only been here a few days."

"We'll see said Frank, tossing her black curls. "They say he's studying law, and I mean to marry a lawyer if I can."

The "catching" had hitherto been done by the wiry, nervous, much enduring school masters, made tyrants by the idleness and insolence and insubornation of the larger scholars.—They had "caught" boys by the collar; "caught" the older girls reading novels under cover of well-thumbed school-books; caught them writing love-letters instead of compositions, and held them up to the ridicule of the school. One who is always on the watch for mischief is sure to find it.

This regime had passed away. A young and handsome man, a very Chesterfield in manners, had met the scholars as a gentleman meets young ladies and gentlemen, and now some of the girls declared, as no girl with self-respect would declare, that he was to be caught himself

So enthusiastic, so really imbued with his work was he, that he easily inspired the best spirits in the school, so that they vied with each other in keeping up with their studies and in general good behavior.

But, strangely enough, the master seemed determined not to be 'caught.' In vain invitations poured upon him to parties, to all the Baywood gayeties; in vain the nets were spread in his sight; in vain some of the young ladies dressed for him, smiled at him—he was apparently insensible to all allurements. He could be seen only at school, in the street, or at church.

"He's just a poke," said Kate, pouting; "and I do hate a poke, young or old!"

One pleasant evening several of the girls met together in the sitting-room of Deacon Tufts. Now the deacon was a cripple, and as he had been chosen Postmaster, and could not go out to the office, the office came to him.

It was a pleasant room, and generally quite well filled with applicants for letters. As was often the case in the informal little meetings, the master was the subject under discussion.

"Have you caught him yet?" asked one of the girls of Frank, slyly.

"O, Jessie, here, seems to be the favorite," said Frank. "He has eyes only for her. Hope she appreciates the attention. He ought to be good to her, or maybe his supplies would be cut off."

"Of course I appreciate his kindness," said Jessie with a laugh. "Why only think! He's going to teach me French!"

"Indeed!. The district doesn't pay him for giving you private lessons, though!" said Frank, almost angrily.

"Certainly not," replied Jessie, but his time is his own out of school hours. Of course I try to return his kindnesses."

"I don't doubt it; but pray tell us what way?" asked Frank, ironically:

"O, put flowers in his room to make it look cheerful, and on the table, or make a little bouquet for his coat, that is, I did make one, but he wouldn't wear it," she added.

"Quite sentimental! You have the coast clear before you, haven't you?"

"Well, if you mean he boards at our house, and must be treated kindly, yes. The night you were all at the dance, he took mother and me to ride."

"So that's the reason he didn't come to my party!" cried Frank, her eyes red as well as her cheeks.

"Partly, and partly because he hates dancing; he told me so."

"How well you are matched!" retorted Frank. "You don't dance, and he don't like it. If you keep on with your flowers and your rides you will catch him, never fear!"

"Oh, but I neither wish nor intend to catch him."

"Maybe he is engaged to somebody already; he acts like it," was the suggestion of Frank's cousin. "I told Frank she ought to find out."

"He has plenty of letters addressed in a lady's hand writing," said the deacon, holding one up for them to see, and he turned away with a queer smile; "but I'm pretty sure none of them are from a sweetheart."

"Maybe he's got a sister."

"He has, and a mother, too. His sister is married, and the mother is with her."

"Oh, but then what does he want to hire the brown cottage for?" queried a quiet little girl. "Father has it to let, you know; it seems to me I heard him say the schoolmaster wanted it for his family."

"Absurd!" exclaimed Frank.

At this the Postmaster laughed aloud.

"If he's engaged, he's mean enough!" said Frank, with warmth. "The idea of his coming here under false pretenses!"

"Did he ever tell anybody he was not engaged?" asked the deacon.

"I don't know as he did, and I'm sure I don't care if he's engaged to a dozen girls. If he's conceited enough to think I do, I will soon undeceive him."

It was always self with the foolish girl. Her undue consciousness had led her into trouble more than once.

"Hush, Frank, there's Mr. Evans! I hope he didn't hear us," said Jessie, as the tall figure of the clergyman entered.

"Who cares? If you suppose I am afraid of the minister, you are mistaken," she added, boldly walking up to him, heated with temper and chagrin.

"Mr. Evans, you are one of the school committee," she said with the assurance of a business matron of 40. "Will you please tell us what is the mystery about the school teacher you have employed for the winter?"

"Mystery, mystery!" said Mr. Evans looking at her in surprise. "Really, Miss Frances, I have never heard that there was any mystery about him."

"Well, there is, and I think it ought to be cleared up. Tax-payers ought to know what kind of men come into our midst, especially when he has charge of their daughters."

"He came with the best recommendations," said the minister, more and more surprised.

"Well, sir, the deacon declares he is not engaged to be married, and yet he is looking for a house in which to live, I understand, and he is at the same time playing the free young gentleman among us."

"Has he shown any special attention to you, or trifled with any of my young flock?"

"He is certainly trying to with Jessie, sir."

"Oh, Frank, how can you say so?" cried Jessie, her face aflame, her eyes sparkling indignantly. "He is a perfect gentleman," she added, turning to the minister, "and I know all about him, and meant to tell Frank, after having a little fun. Why, he has been married a year to a most beautiful girl. He told mamma, after we had become a little acquainted, that he married her just after he graduated, because she was alone and had no friends or protector. He is now studying day and night to get admitted to the bar, and he is anxious to bring his wife here; that is why he was looking at the little cottage, as it has a few rooms furnished. Now you have the whole mystery."

"You might have told us before!" cried Frank, with scarlet face. "You, too, Deacon Tufts, ought to be ashamed of your conduct, for of course you knew it."

"To be sure I did. Didn't I answer all your questions, young lady? I thought I would let you run on a while, and get all the nonsense out of you. The master has made no particular secret of his marriage that I know of, neither has he proclaimed it upon the house-tops. Maybe he ought to—I don't know. You knew he was married, Jessie?"

"O, yes, I knew it. He showed mother his wife's photograph, and it seems she can teach botany and conchology and music. She can help him a great deal if she comes here."

Then the minister read Frank and the girls a short lesson, ending with these words:

"When you are old enough and wise enough to have homes of your own, you will wait till some worthy man throws out the line and catches you. And I am sure you will find in the young woman who is coming a beautiful, discreet, and lovable companion, and, although none of you have caught the schoolmaster, you ought to catch many a wise lesson from his manly, modest demeanor, as well as from his instruction from the desk."

A Bellaire (Ohio) milk-man, on the day after Christmas, was surprised at the explosion of a loaded milk can in his wagon by the combined action of frost and the rough road.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

THE OLD MAID'S BEVERAGE.

Something About the Cultivation and Preparation of Tea.

The districts of China which supply the greater portion of the teas exported to Europe and America lie between the twenty-fifth and thirty-first degree of north latitude, and the best districts are those between twenty-seven and thirty-one degrees (Fortune.) The plants are raised from seed, kept over winter in moist earth and planted in March three or four feet apart, and look like a garden of gooseberry bushes, and they bear from the fourth to the twelfth year, both inclusive. The leaves are plucked by hand, chiefly by women; and the season is from earliest spring to the end of June. The first gathering is the best, afterward the leaves become tougher. The mode of drying and roasting the leaves generally, and the specific processes by which the green and black teas are severally prepared, have been minutely described by Mr. Fortune, and from his description, somewhat condensed, we learn:—First, that in the process of drying, the leaves are roasted in such a way as necessarily to bring about many chemical changes within the substance of the leaves themselves, producing the varied flavors, odors and tastes which distinguish the different teas. Secondly, that the mode of handling by which the leaves are converted, respectively, into green and black teas is the cause of the different colors of these two main varieties. Thus for the green teas: First, the leaves are roasted almost immediately after they are gathered. Secondly, they are dried off quickly after the rolling process. The whole operation is speedy and simple. Black teas: First, they are spread out for some time after they are gathered in the air. Second, they are then tossed about until they become soft and flaccid. Third, they are now roasted for a few minutes and rolled, after which they are exposed to the air for a few hours in a soft and moist state. Fourth. Lastly, they are dried slowly over charcoal fires. It is by lengthened exposure to the air, therefore, in the process of drying, accompanied by perhaps a slight heating and germentation, that the dark color and the distinguishing flavor are imparted to black teas of commerce. The produce of different districts varies in quality and flavor with the climate, the soil and the variety of the plant cultivated, as well as with the period at which the leaves are gathered and with the mode of drying them. It may be fresh information for our readers to be told that, though tea is used only as an illusion, it has been long known that the spent leaves contain the elements of one of the most nutritive of vegetable substances, and are only not used on account of the almost universal toughness of the leaves of the China teas supplied to foreign countries. But this toughness does not obtain in the case of Japanese teas, whose leaves may be advantageously eaten either with salt or sugar.

For imparting a nice, uniform color, or skin, to green teas, the Chinese use a mixture of prussian blue and plaster of paris (sulphate of lime), the quantity varying slightly with the amount of color required. This they do to please the purchasers, but never use colored tea themselves. How far this small quantity may prejudice health is not quite clear, but there is less doubt about the pernicious qualities of an adulterated tea largely manufactured by the Chinese, under the name of lie tea. This consists of the sweepings and dust of the tea warehouses, cemented together with rice-water and then rolled into grains. It is made to resemble either black to imitate caper, or green to resemble gun-powder, and is manufactured professedly for the purpose of adulterating the better sorts of tea. The cleverness exhibited in the manufacture of the different kinds of lie-tea is something rather surprising, and so close is the imitation in many cases that much practice and skill are required for its detection. Our investigations hitherto disclose the fact that the better brands of lie-tea consist of the dust of tea only, made up into little masses, or of this dust mixed with that of foreign leaves, but the great bulk of the lie-tea met with is compounded of tea dust, with sometimes the dust of leaves other than tea, of which silex and magnetic oxide of iron form a considerable proportion, the masses of pellets being colored with the substances already mentioned, and some others.—San Francisco News-Letter.

To make Ham Balls, beat six eggs until very light, and add flour gradually until you have a batter stiff enough to admit of being made into balls. Prepare some cold boiled ham, fat and lean mixed, by chopping it up very fine; then flour it, and mix with the batter. Drop the balls into melted lard that is boiling hot; fry, and then drain them on a sieve till free from the adhesion of any grease. This is a nice way to use ham after it has been sent to the table several days, and a good deal has been cut from the joint, so that it no longer makes a very sightly dish.

A WONDERFUL RECORD.

Myriads of so-called "specifics" and "cures" for Rheumatism have already been brought before the public, and many of them have even been endorsed by the certificates of respectable and prominent citizens, who have derived benefit from such preparations. There is no doubt that a great many of these "Liniments," "Oils," etc., so widely advertised and freely recommended for Rheumatism and painful complaints of a similar nature, have genuine merit and will relieve certain types of the complaints named; but when Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and kindred diseases have become chronic and threaten serious results, you may rest assured that they will help you but very little. Although not recommended as "infallible," the peculiar qualities of St. Jacobs Oil especially adapt it to those cases which may be termed "chronic," and which have previously withstood all known "specifics," as well as the prescriptions of the best physicians.

We would mention, as an example, the case of Mr. A. Hellman, Editor of the Pittsburgh Republican, who suffered with Rheumatism for two years. After vainly using all the best recommended remedies and exhausting the skill of the most experienced physicians without even temporary relief, it required only two bottles of St. Jacobs Oil to effect a permanent cure. Mr. C. Hanni, a well-known citizen of Youngstown, Ohio, secured for his wife, who for twelve years had been a constant sufferer from Neuralgia in the head, the services of the ablest physicians in the land, but they were unable to do anything for her; half a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil cured her. Mr. Wm. Reinhardt, Elmore, Wis., reports the case of a neighbor who for twenty-four years had suffered so terribly with Rheumatism that, at times, he could hardly move around; a few bottles of St. Jacobs Oil cured him. "To cap the climax," however, Mr. A. Neiger, of Taylorville, Pa., writes that his mother, who has been a continual sufferer with Rheumatism for the past thirty years, used one bottle of St. Jacobs Oil and was immediately relieved of all pain. These are results which truly deserve to be brought to public notice; but they are not exceptions, as will be seen by the numerous other certificates from all parts of the United States. It should be the duty of every one to call the attention of his suffering friends and neighbors to this wonderfully efficacious preparation, especially as the low price of 50 cents a bottle places it within the reach of all persons, rich and poor.

LIBRARY OF UNIVERSAL KNOWLEDGE.

Volume IV. of this great work, published by the American Book Exchange, New York, is ready January 15th, and volume V. will be issued about ten days later. They have been delayed somewhat by the printing of the large editions of the previous three volumes and the other publications of the house, their facilities for manufacture having been taxed far beyond their capacity. Removing January 1st to the Tribune Building, and to the large building No. 26 Beekman and No. 18 Spruce street, where their facilities will enable them to manufacture from 6,000 to 8,000 volumes a day, the publishers expect to complete the entire work within the year, as announced. The volumes thus far issued being only the reprint of the last edition of the well-known Chamber's Encyclopædia, nothing more need be said of them than that they are well printed and bound; their form is vastly more convenient than the usual unwieldly quarto or octavo, and their price is cheap beyond all precedent in book-making, so that to the uninitiated it is a mystery how so much can be given for a little money, but to the practical printer and book maker, who knows how the greatest element in modifying the cost of books is the number of buyers among whom the investment cost is to be distributed, the wonder would be not that the books can be made for the price, but that the number of buyers should be counted except by millions. Those who take pleasure in the dissemination of useful knowledge and choice literature will be glad to aid with their influence an enterprise so altogether worthy. The publishers will send any quantity of descriptive catalogues, to those who may apply, for distribution among acquaintances.

Feels Young Again.

"My mother was afflicted a long time with Neuralgia and a dull, heavy, inactive condition of the whole system, headache, nervous prostration, and was almost helpless. No physicians or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters, with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over 70 years old.—We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family."—A lady, Providence, R. I.

Mattie had a little corn upon her little toe, and every where that Mattie went the corn was sure to go.

YOU SHOULD TAKE IT.

In Point of Excellence It is Unsurpassed, and Every Family Will Appreciate it and Enjoy Its Perusal.

Every man should make his home as comfortable and attractive as possible.

A most essential requisite to that end is a good newspaper. The perusal of such a newspaper not only instills in the rising generation a love of home but is a constant incentive to improvement. Simply as an educator, and aside from all other considerations, no parent should forego taking into his family THE DETROIT FREE PRESS.

For the year 1880 we have to offer the standard features which have made THE FREE PRESS the most popular journal in the world, and with such additions as will prove of special interest to Michigan readers.

Addressing more particularly the farmer, we take extreme pains to procure complete and accurate market reports. They embrace farm products of every character, including live stock. The quotations, corrected to the day of publication, from all the leading cities, as well as those of Detroit, are given each week.

A carefully organized system of regular correspondence throughout Michigan will give the readers early and complete intelligence of all happenings in the State.

At this point we wish to remind readers that the best and fullest reports as well as the earliest news of all important affairs, whether happening in Michigan or elsewhere, will be found in THE FREE PRESS. We might refer to the two most recent and terrible disasters in Michigan—the Adrian grand stand horror and the Jackson railroad accident—as examples, reinforced on frequent occasions by accounts of great public events which THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS has laid before its readers in advance of its contemporaries.

No newspaper has brighter or more intelligent editorial comments on the leading topics of the day.

None surpass it in candor; none equal it in literary merit; none approach it in spice, sparkle and vivacity.

Its correspondence by its superior excellence, has attracted great attention, and in this especial department The Free Press is acknowledged to stand at the very front.

Readers of The Free Press will receive through its columns an intelligible idea of new books of merit as they are from time to time published. Liberal extracts and discriminating reviews appear every week.

Attention is given to historical topics, and articles having special reference to our own State are in preparation.

"THE HOUSEHOLD."

Every issue of THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS is accompanied by "The Household," a supplement devoted to social and domestic topics, flower culture, fancy work, toilet and cooking recipes and household matters generally. It is furnished without extra charge, and every purchaser or subscriber to The Weekly Free Press is entitled to receive a copy.

To sum up, all must conclude that The Weekly Free Press and The Household—a supplement which accompanies every issue—though furnished together for $1.50 a year, compare in the amount and excellence of contents with the best of the four dollar magazines.

The Weekly Free Press and "The Household" together are furnished at $1.50 a year.

Liberal premiums, embracing yearly subscriptions to the various magazines, etc., are given for clubs. Address letters to

Montreal Heard From.

R. L. Mosely, of Montreal, Canada, certified Sept. 27, 1879, that he had suffered terribly from dyspepsia, and was completely cured by taking Warner's Safe Bitters. He says: "My appetite is good, and I suffer no inconvenience from eating hearty meals." These Bitters are also a specific for all skin diseases.

A schoolboy got up to read a composition on "The Tree." He got as far as "This subject has many branches," when the teacher said "Stop, you have not made your bow yet." "If you interrupt me again," said the boy "I'll leave." "You give me any more impudence and I'll take the sap out of you. Do you understand?" "I twig," said the boy, and then the regular order of business proceeded.

SHE HAD HIM THERE.

A Quaker shop-keeper once met a Quaker customer of his going home with her bundles. He had been absent from his place, and had a notion, in his wise head that she had been trading with a rival whom he did not very much love.

"How much did thee give a yard for this, Mary?"

"One dollar."

"Why, I am surprised at thee! I could let thee have it for seventy-five cents. And how much for this?"

"Two dollars."

"Why that was unreasonable. I could have let thee have it for $1.50. Why will thee go away trading with strangers and world's people, Mary?"

"I don't know what thee is talking about, friend John," she said; but I did buy all these things at thy store, and if thee says the truth thee must owe me considerable money."

HIS NAME WAS SMITH.

In the grammar department of one of our public schools, a few days since, the teacher, after talking with her class on the subject of mythology, read to them as follows.

"Vulcan, smith, architect and chariot builder for the gods of Mount Olympus, built their houses, constructed their furniture," etc.

The following day the subject of the preceeding day was given as a language lesson, and, as no mention had been made of Vulcan, the teacher asked the class who built the houses for the gods on Mount Olympus? For a while the children seemed lost in profound thought, when suddenly a gleam of intelligence illumined the face of one little girl, and she replied: "I can't tell the ink of his first name, but his last name is Smith!"

YOUTH.

There is nothing like youth. The sunshine streams upon the flowers.—The blood rushes wildly through the veins. The air is full of music, and echoes of happy laughter are borne on every breeze. All the world seems wrapped in golden mist, and hope, a white-winged angel, shines in the rosy heaven of the future. For age, the rustle of the dead leaves! For sorrow, the wail of the autumn wind, the sad November twilight, and the lonesome splashing of the rain! What have age and sorrow to do with life? Let them thrust away their doleful gloom—while for youth and beauty, and love and mirth, the silver bells ring, the wine sparkles, and the earth is strewn with roses.

Poverty and Suffering.

"I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did them no good.—I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well and none of us have seen a sick day since, and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost—I know it.

A Rochester Physician's Experience.

R. Calkins, M. D., of Rochester, N. Y., certifies Oct. 6th, 1879, that he has used the Safe Kidney and Liver Cure in his practice for diseases of the kidneys and liver, and the result has been satisfactory in the extreme. He says: "I would now prescribe the same remedy to all similarly afflicted, and you are at liberty to so state in your testimonials."

A country doctor, being out for a day's shooting, took his errand boy to carry the game bag. Entering a field of turnips, the dog pointed; and the boy, overjoyed at the prospect of his master's success, exclaimed: "Lor', master, there's a covey; if you get near 'em' won't you physic 'em?"—"Physic them, you young rascal!—What do you mean?" said the doctor. "Why, kill 'em, to be sure," replied the lad.

TECUMSEH, MICH., JAN. 29, 1880.

A LITTLE RAILROAD TALK.

The time has arrived when the residents of Tecumseh must soon decide a question of great moment to them, and one which will have much influence upon the business prosperity of this community for many years to come. Tecumseh has many natural advantages. She has a splendid water power, a magnificent farming section on every side and an enterprising class of business men. But she has always labored under the great disadvantage of being destitute of sufficient railroad facilities to enable her to compete with rival towns for trade and manufactures. She now has an opportunity presented to overcome this obstacle to her progress. Will she avail herself of it? It rests with her own citizens to decide.

In this connection we would offer a few suggestions and ask for them a careful consideration.

In the first place there is every reason to believe that this Toledo and Milwaukee road will be constructed within a few months. The eastern and western ends of the projected line are already in operation, and it only requires the construction of some eighty miles of new road to complete the gap and form a first-class through line from Toledo to Grand Haven.—The men who have undertaken the work will hang on until they put the road through. This road will be built through Clinton, Tecumseh or Adrian within twelve months. This is as certain as any future event can be.

Secondly, this road offers the only reasonable chance of securing another railroad and a competing line through this vicinity. Many of our business men have been hopeful that the Adrian and Detroit road would yet be finished, and thus give us a direct outlet to Detroit, and a connection with the Wabash system to the Southwest. But the virtual consolidation of the Wabash combination with the Vanderbilt lines a few weeks since has blasted that hope entirely. Detroit is now agitating the southwestern connection again, but if anything ever comes of it, which is doubtful, the line is likely to run via the Ypsilanti and Hillsdale road already constructed. A late Post and Tribune contains the following of a meeting recently held at Ypsilanti:

The Detroit, Hillsdale and Southwestern railroad meeting was held at Ypsilanti yesterday. The management of the road was put into the hands of a commission, the names of the members of which have not been developed. The road is virtually in the hands of John B. Alley and his agents. There will be no consolidation of interests with the Toledo and Ann Arbor road, the Hillsdale road having been bought for a distinct purpose, namely, to secure a through line from Detroit to Chicago.

Another meeting was held in Detroit last Saturday, and something may result from it. But if the Butler line should be built, it will only be another feeder for the Vanderbilt lines, and it will in all probability utilize the Ypsilanti and Hillsdale road already built. The fact therefore remains, that the Toledo and Milwaukee project affords the only reasonable chance of a competing railroad thro' this section.

Will this road benefit Tecumseh village? We answer most emphatically, Yes. There seems to be but one side to this question. On this line Tecumseh will be the important town between Toledo and Marshall, all other stations on each side being comparatively small places. The road will give us the sharpest competing rates between here and Toledo, and thus make Tecumseh a very eligible location for manufactures. In addition to this, it will virtually give us competing rates to Detroit. It will shorten the distance to that city via Dundee, which will be felt in reduced passenger charges. On eastern bound freight the Lake Shore will bring her rates to Detroit on a par with the rates to Toledo, for she will secure the entire traffic on all business to Detroit. Thus the new road would give us a new outlet to Toledo and also cheapen our present outlet to Detroit.

It will stimulate business in every branch. The additional facilities of communication with the towns of Northern Lenawee will increase our trade and be a direct benefit to every retail trader in the village. Tecumseh merchants already compete with Adrian for the trade of Northwestern Lenawee and this road will secure for our merchants a large additional slice of that custom. The increased railroad travel will benefit every hotel in the village.

It will enhance the value of every foot of real estate in the corporation. Every man who receives or ships a pound of freight of any kind whatever will feel its effect in his reduced expenses.

This is an advantage of so decided a character that it will stimulate every manufacturing enterprise in the village; not only so, but it will invite more of them. An increase of our population will necessarily follow, and this will increase the trade of every retailer. Additional business will require more banking accommodations, and thus both of our banks will be very materially benefited. A liberal increase in our population will help every professional man in the village. The mechanic will be more certain of steady work at renumerative wages. The artisan will have fewer idle days to eat up his income. Carpenters, builders and painters will have new blocks and residences to construct and adorn. Even the laboring man will secure more day's labor in a year, and at better prices. The stimulus which any competing line of railroad gives to any town will thrill through every vein and artery of our business system, and every class of citizens in the community must be benefited thereby. Every owner of a business block would find his rents increasing. The stockholders of the Opera House could soon place that property on a paying basis, for it would be in demand two evenings where it is one now. Whom could the road injure? No one.

Would this road benefit the farmers who reside near Tecumseh? Most certainly it would. And many of our best farmers are already waking up to this fact. What it has cost them during the year to ship their produce more than what it would had there been a competing railroad, is a question which they should all understand. They can then judge intelligently whether it is for their interest to remain idle and indifferent, when such an excellent opportunity presents itself to free themselves from their present situation. In another column we present a table showing the shipments from Tecumseh of articles of export during 1879. The flour exported during that period was 45,345 bbls, and the wheat amounted to 25,561 bushels. Allowing five bushels of wheat to each barrel of flour, the total number of bushels of wheat purchased at Tecumseh in 1879 was 252,286 bushels. In July last the freight from Tecumseh to New York city was about ten cents per bushel, which gave the road a fair renumeration. As there is no competing line of railroad to the seaboard, rates have continued to advance until now they are over twenty cents a bushel from Tecumseh to New York. On Monday last the best white wheat was worth in Tecumseh $1,20. On the same day the same grade of wheat was quoted in New York city at $1,42. The difference in price at the two ends of the route shows the cost of transportation. Now every cent added to the cost of sending a bushel of wheat to the seaboard, takes just that amount from what the farmer ought to receive for it. And if the freight rates are twenty cents per bushel, when they should be but ten, the farmer gets ten cents a bushel less for his wheat than he ought to. About two thirds of the shipments from Tecumseh for the year 1879 were made during the last six months. Allowing only five cents per bushel loss, which is less than the actual loss, we have a total of $8,500 loss during the past 6 months on wheat alone sold at Tecumseh. But the farmer has oats and corn, live stock, apples, wool and other articles to sell, all of which would feel the beneficial effects of a competing railroad at his home market. In addition to this, a liberal increase in the population of Tecumseh would improve the market here for vegetables and small fruits, butter, eggs, poultry and articles of like character, and thus indirectly add materially to the farmers' income each year.

This subject bears investigation. Looked upon from whatever standpoint, we are fully convinced that this railroad would be a great business benefit to Tecumseh and the farmers around us.

A successful town, like a successful man, is one that avails itself of great opportunities when they occur. We cannot make opportunities; Providence places them within our reach. Such an opportunitiy is not given to us every day, nor every year. Let us grasp it while we may, and let every property holder be willing and ready to pay his share towards securing the prize. Should Tecumseh get this railroad we shall go forward in a career of business prosperity such as we have never known in times past, and within five years our beautiful village will become one of the leading business centers in Southern Michigan.

"We are one year nearer heaven," is the way a Kansas paper begins a farewell to the old year. Those subscribers who have not paid up are not included.

AMONG OUR EXCHANGES.

The Red Bandana at Work.

New York Tribune.—Senator Thurman last week introduced 13 woman suffrage petitions into the Senate.

Sustained His Reputation.

Philadelphia Times. — President Hayes promised the Governorship of Utah to three different men, but when he came to look into the matter he found that he couldn't appoint more than one. He therefore picked out the only applicant for the place who had not been promised it, and has sustained his well-won reputation for going back on his promises.

With a Whoop and Hurrah.

Troy Times.—The anti-Grant and Democratic papers are all telling us that the Grant boom is subsiding.—No doubt it will continue to subside until the Convention meets, and then Grant will be nominated with a whoop and a hurrah that can be heard from Maine to California.

Ought to Know Better.

Adrian Times.—John G. Thompson the prize blow-hard of Ohio, is very confident that under certain conditions, Mr. Thurman will become a formidable candidate for the Democratic nomination. John is a jolly joker, but he ought to know better than to joke in the presence of the dead.

Does Not Flourish in Maine.

Cincinnati Enquirer. — Secretary Sherman has frequently stumped in Maine for the Republican party, and Mr. Blaine has as often "helped out" in Ohio—a very pleasant and harmonious arrangement; but there is not a corresponding reciprocity of "boom," so to speak. It may be in the climate. Sherman's presidential sprouts do not flourish in the rigor of a Maine winter.

Will be Needed Again this Year.

Philadelphia Times.—After all, the organs didn't succeed in getting Jeff Davis elected to the Senate from Mississippi. They didn't seem to have the right kind of influence with the Democratic Legislature of that State, and they should now see what they can now do with this old scare-crow as a candidate for the Presidency. He comes in very handy to frighten people with and the organs cannot afford to allow him to drop out of sight. He will be needed as one of the leading issues again this year.

Where is Julius Cæsar?

Detroit Free Press.—George Franklin Gauks, of Springfield, Illinois, is engaged in establishing polygamy all over the United States, and Julius Cæsar Burrows should be after him him with a constitutional amendment. He has four wives in Illinois, one in Iowa, and one in Pennsylvania, with thirty-five States and an indefinite number of wives yet to hear from.—He is only 35 years old and evidently began his profession early. He is also said to be good looking, but will probably look better in a penitentiary.

A Dish Fit for the Gods.

New York Tribune.—Jere. Black shows his usual sagacity by warning the Democratic party that if it is going to sacrifice Tilden it should have a care about the manner in which it does the business. He is not a carcass to be hacked by hounds, but a dish to be carved fit for the gods. No Democrat can reach the White House by stepping on the political corpse of Mr. Tilden." All the rival candidates who have tried to crowd Tilden off the track have discovered this. He has a "twist" on the party. Either he must be nominated, or he must be permitted to name the candidate.—This is what the classical Judge Black calls carving a dish for the gods. A more accurate definition would be "offering up a sacrifice to the barrel."

Vote the Money and Go Home.

Detroit Evening News.—Further financial discussion in congress will have very little interest for the public, as both parties in the house have given formal notice by their vote on the Buckner bill that they will have nothing to do with financial legislation this session. The senate having resolved itself into a debating society on the Bayard resolution, may continue its speech-making and possibly pass that or some other measure, but nothing of the sort can possibly become law. That being the case, the best thing both houses could do would be to vote the appropriations and go home.

Put Him Out.

Toledo Blade.—It is highly desirable that Postmaster General Key should look after Postmaster James of the New York office, whose employees have been guilty of a display of intelligence contrary to the law of the Postoffice Department made and provided. A few days since a letter was mailed in Connecticut for a Toledo firm, bearing simply the address, Maher & Grosh, 34 Monroe street, —— Ohio. It came through New York, where some daring clerk added the word, "Toledo," and stamped in the corner the words, "address corrected by the New York office." Just what ought to happen to the man who obtrudes his intellect into the affairs of the Postoffice Department in this manner, the Postmaster-General alone can say.

TESTIMONY

Of the HON. JOS. E. GRAY, Judge of the Superior Court, Chicago, Ill.

CHICAGO, Dec. 14, 1878.

DR. S. D. HOWE,

DEAR SIR:—Permit me to add my grateful testimony to the army of witnesses to the virtue of your justly celebrated Arabian remedies. For a long time my wife was seriously afflicted with hacking cough, oppressed breathing, soreness of the chest, and constant acute pain in the lower portion of the right lung and under the shoulder blade. Her sufferings were intense, and she became extremely nervous and prostrated. Her disease was pronounced consumption by the physicians of Chicago and other cities, whose prescriptions had been taken without benefit. When you visited Chicago in June, 1873, we called on you, having very little hope of deriving help from your treatment. We were inspired with hope by the skillful manner in which your thorough examination was conducted, and the satisfactory explanation with which you colored your diagnosis. My wife determined to take your medicines in accordance with your plan and practical directions. She began to use the Arabian Milk Cure and Arabian Tonic; their beneficial effect at once became manifest—the cough loosened and soon ceased, respiration became easy, the soreness of the chest was relieved and all pain removed, she began to gain in flesh and improve in strength and appearance. I fully believe that your medicines and skillful advice have saved the life of my wife. She unites with me in this grateful tribute to the merit of your remedies.

Very respectfully yours,

JOSEPH E. GRAY.

THE POULTRY SHOW.

The exhibition of the Michigan Poultry and Pet Stock association which was held last week at Ann Arbor, was a decided success. The Democrat in its report says: Mr. Peck of Earlsville, Ohio, who arrived yesterday, says the exhibition eclipses the Indiana show, which was considered the best ever held in the country.

The number of entries was large and the quality of the exhibits was extra.

Tecumseh was represented and carried off several of the honors. David Jones received first premium on old Buffs; first and second on young Buffs; first and second on Dark Brahmas. J. W. Jones received first and third premium on colored Dorkings. David Jones' exhibition of Buffs was a very fine one. He is exhibiting his birds this week at Saginaw.

Jud. DePuy had several coops of Plymouth Rocks on exhibition, on which he carried off three first premiums and one special. Jud. has a fine lot of birds for sale and has already received some orders for eggs.

Adrian Times: Addison, Cambridge, Franklin, Tecumseh, Ridgeway and Macon will not be sober staid towns again until they have a railroad—or the fever dies down.

THE installation of officers of the Macon Grange took place last Friday evening. We understand they had an enjoyable time. An address was delivered by T. F. Moore.

LAVERN WHEELER is home again, having finished his job of scenic painting for the Hudson Opera House. He has done a fine job for them and they are well satisfied with his work.

MRS. J. W. BOARDMAN, of Chicago, sister of W. H. Sink, was in Tecumseh over last Sabbath. She made Mr. Sink a flying call on her return from an extended visit to New York.

THE new firm in the saloon business is I. P. Keyser and Vet Erskine, not Erskine & Rowland as we stated last week. They will occupy the store lately vacated by Sutfin & Montague.

DR. PERRY, of Franklin, called at our office on business last Tuesday.—In answer to the question "How are the roads now?" he replied, "There is just one mud hole between Tecumseh village and my house."

J. A. MUNGER has moved his harness shop into the first building south of Welling's repair shop, on railroad street. This will be an excellent location for him. He swings out a new advertisement this week.

IN Ayer's Almanac for 1880, the weather prognostication for Jan. 21-24, is "Snow Storm." It is not likely that the man who made the almanac wilfully lied, but it shows how easy it is for men to be deceived.

ELL GRAY returned home last week from Ireland where he has been spending the winter. He looks as hale and hearty as a backwoods-man. Irish air evidently agrees with him. He expects to remain at home during the coming summer.

BOB INGERSOLL will lecture at Adrian on Monday evening next, Feb. 2d. Subject: "The Gods." This lecture is under the auspices of the J. de V. Club. Tickets, fifty cents. Parties out of town can have their seats reserved by sending the price to O. F. Berdan.

A MEETING was held in Detroit last Tuesday evening to further the Detroit & Butler railroad project. The two committees appointed by the Board of Trade and Merchants' Exchange made a report strongly recommending the enterprise, and they were instructed to call a public meeting at an early day. Nothing was said indicating the probable route which the line would take.

THE telegraph line between the depot and express office has been completed, and it will undoubtedly be a great convenience.

A. W. SLAYTON & Co. have sold their planing mill to Wolcott & Temple. There will be no change in the business as at present conducted.

A MOVEMENT has been started in Adrian to enforce the new liquor law. Wouldn't it be a good plan to do some of that business here in Tecumseh?

WE are in receipt of a copy of the annual report of the Commissioner of the State Land office. It contains much valuable statistical information.

FRANK BUMAN, who has been very sick for some time, has so far recovered that he is about again. He expects to open his store for business next week.

LATEST RAILROAD SPARKS.

The Adrian Daily Times of yesterday contains a full account of the Tuesday evening's meeting at Detroit relative to the railroad project to Butler. The Times seems confident that the matter will be pushed through. It says:

This is an opportunity which must not be lost. The money must be raised at once, and without any prolonged drumming. Adrian and the country along the line will take care of the right of way, which is all that is expected of them. Not a cent is to be paid until the road is in operation, so that no risk is taken in subscribing. We get the road or nothing is to be paid. It will be worth many times $200,000 to the city of Detroit, and there should be a united and determined effort within the next few days to secure this necessary sum.

An excellent committee and one in whom the people have confidence, have the matter in charge, and their plan of operations will be made known in due time.

The Times does not state who their committee are, nor what their plan of operation is. It is decidedly noncommittal on these points.

Supposing this to be a bona fide project and one likely to succeed, how will it effect Tecumseh and the Toledo and Milwaukee enterprise.

First, if the road can be laced on the old grade from Adrian to Macon, so much the better for this vicinity. We need the Toledo & Milwaukee just as much, and the two road will be better than either one without the other.

Secondly, if the Butler road should take an air line and dodge upon the east, then the Toledo & Milwaukee will be an absolute necessity to Tecumseh, if she would retain her present business position.

THE RAILROAD PROSPECTS.

The canvass in behalf of the Toledo and Milwaukee Railroad is progressing favorably. The committees here in the village are prosecuting their work this week, and the surrounding townships are also doing what they can to aid the enterprise. The farmers of Tecumseh and Raisin townships are becoming interested, and will render considerable assistance we have no doubt before the canvass is closed. We hear good reports also from other towns on the proposed line. Addison and Cambridge both will have their quota raised this week. Ridgeway is coming to the front finely and Franklin is getting a good start.

Last Saturday evening a meeting was held in the McLain school house in East Raisin. Geo. Lester was elected chairman, and Wm. Comfort was chosen secretary. The subject was then presented in detail to the farmers present, and it was clearly shown that the farmers were as much interested in a competing line of railroad as the residents of the village. Elwood Comfort followed in a few remarks favoring the road. John Hanley also spoke in favor of the road, and explained how the canvass was progressing in the West part of Raisin.—R. M. Boyd expressed himself as strongly in favor of the movement, and willing to help all he was able.—It was then moved and carried that a committee of four be selected to canvass the township East of the river, and this committee was made up as follows: H. Holdredge, M. Smeltzer, R. M. Boyd, Geo. Lester. The meeting had a good effect and many of the farmers of East Raisin will be willing to aid the enterprise.

Next week Tuesday, Feb. 3d, a joint meeting of all the townships in Lenawee county, through which the proposed line is to run, will be held in this village at two o'clock P. M., to receive reports and take further action should it be necessary. Delegations will be present from Addison, Cambridge, Franklin, Raisin and Ridgeway, and a genuine railroad love feast is expected. Every town on the line should be prepared to report its full quota at that time. Mr. Latcha, the President of the road, will be present at this meeting.

JOHN R. CLARK'S LECTURE.

Last Tuesday evening our townsman, John R. Clark, delivered his lecture entitled "To and Fro in London," at the Opera House, for the benefit of the M. E. Sunday School. Mr. Clark has several times lectured here at home upon his favorite theme of Temperance, but he has never before appeared on a Tecumseh platform in his miscellaneous lectures. The hall was well filled, the audience was a fine one, and it is no flattery to say that the lecture gave excellent satisfaction. Mr. Clark related what he had seen in London himself, his lecture consisting mostly of personal experiences and anecdotes of others and events which had come under his observation. The same earnest style which pervades his temperance addresses was displayed in this effort. His manner reminds one very forcibly of John B. Gough. Mr. Clark is rapidly gaining the reputation of one of the best temperance orators in the Union. He has delivered his lecture "To and Fro in London," over eighty times in Michigan, and it has invariably given the best of satisfaction. The receipts the other evening paid all expenses and left a nice little balance for the Methodist Sunday School.

Uncle Alvin Joslin.

The Chas. L. Davis comedy troupe appeared last evening at the Opera House, in the celebrated play "Alvin Joslin." It was the first time this combination had ever visited Tecumseh, and we believe we speak the honest sentiments of every one present in saying that it was the best comedy yet produced in our Opera House.—Alvin Joslin is simply immense. Mr. Davis has conceived the character of a jolly, honest, hard-fisted, back-woods farmer to perfection, and his presentation of the part is inimitable. His support from the other members of the company was also first-rate. Their claim to produce 180 laughs in 180 minutes is no exaggeration, for we presume many a housewife in Tecumseh has been compelled to sew on her husband's vest buttons this morning.—The universal verdict was, "Come again, Uncle Alvin."

Auction Sale.

James Ebbett, having sold his farm, will sell at auction on the premises, two miles east of Alex. Easlick's saw mill in Macon, on Thursday, Feb. 5th, at 12 o'clock noon, one good milch cow and calf, quantity of corn in the ear, quantity of white oats, 75 bushels of potatoes, 8 tons of hay, 1 democrat wagon, 25 cords of wood, 500 fence rails, 1 straw stack and a quantity of household furniture. Usual terms of sale. Abe Hanford, Auctioneer.

THE rooms in the second story of the Hewitt block are being repaired, and will soon be occupied by Dr. Catlin for an office. They will make a fine suit of rooms for such a purpose.

A GRIST OF COMPLIMENTS.

The recent change in form and make-up of the HERALD seems to give excellent satisfaction. Many of our subscribers have spoken in very flattering terms of the improvement, and below we give the opinions of some of our exchanges. Their expressions of praise show that our efforts to improve the HERALD are appreciated.

Detroit Free Press: The Tecumseh HERALD has taken a new departure, having changed from an overgrown blanket sheet to a six column quarto pasted and cut. It is now one of the most convenient and best looking papers in the State, as well as being one of the most readable.

Big Rapids Herald: The Tecumseh HERALD has been changed from a nine column folio to a six column quarto, cut and pasted, and all printed at home. It is one of the best papers in Michigan.

Adrian Press: The Tecumseh HERALD has changed from a folio to a quarto sheet, a form which will be a convenience to its readers.

Adrian Times: The Tecumseh HERALD has grown this week to an eight-page six column paper. It is very neat in make-up, and the new departure augurs well for renewed life and prosperity. Long may it wave.

Clinton News: The Tecumseh HERALD has been changed to a six column quarto, an improvement over the old form. Brother Stacy gets up a good paper, well worthy the patronage of the citizens of Tecumseh.

Manchester Enterprise: The Tecumseh HERALD comes to us now in changed form, having followed the style of the Adrian Times, and adopted a six column quarto. Well, the HERALD is not only one of the oldest but it is one of the best papers in Southern Michigan, and the Enterprise wishes it unbounded success.

Blissfield Advance: The Tecumseh HERALD comes to us this week in quarto form. It is now a 48 column paper, very neatly made up, is brimming full of news and presents a bright and handsome appearance.

Deerfield Record: The Tecumseh HERALD appeared last week, changed from a nine column folio to a six column quarto, which is a decided improvement. It is one of the best papers in the county.

Dundee Reporter: The Tecumseh HERALD last week came to us in very much improved appearance; instead of nine column folio it is now a six column quarto, which makes a much more convenient and nicer sheet.

Hudson Post: The Tecumseh HERALD comes to us enlarged to an eight page, six column paper. It makes a great improvement in the looks of the paper, and we wish brother Stacy success.

Detroit Evening News: The Tecumseh HERALD has been greatly improved of late, and is now one of the handsomest and most conveniently made up quartos in the State.

Morenci Observer: The Tecumseh HERALD follows the example of the Adrian Times, coming out last week as a six column quarto. The Times might suit the convenience of its readers better if it would imitate the HERALD in one respect—paste its pages together.

THE Michigan State Press association held its annual meeting last Tuesday at Ann Arbor. Over sixty papers in the state were represented and the meeting was a very enjoyable one. The election of officers for the ensuing year was as follows:

Vice-Presidents—L. A. Duncan, Niles; Geo. F. Lewis, Saginaw; M. D. Hamilton, Monroe.
Treasurer—E. F. Grabill, Greenville.
Secretary—E. S. Hoskin, Bellevue.

DIED

BURNETT—On the 26th instant, at Detroit, Eugene Reuben, infant son of W. Q. and Mary E. Burnett, aged two months.

DEPUY—In this village on the 27th inst., Willie V., son of E. Vance and Gertrude DePuy, aged 5 years, 11 months and 9 days.

True we know the but the casket
We have hidden from our sight;
In our Father's crown the jewel
Gleams forever pure and bright.
So we try to bow in silence
'Neath the blow that on us fell,
Knowing He whose hand hath dealt it,
Ever "doeth all things well."

Oh, the loneliness and sorrow,
In our hearts and in our home,
When we know on no to-morrow
Will our absent darling come.
Why this cross? we grieving, question;
God who took our idol knew.
If our treasure were in heaven
We would long to follow too.

COM.

TURNER—On the 4th of January, at West River, Maryland, Oakella Turner, aged 25 years, 1 month and 20 days.

The deceased was born in Covington, Indiana, November 16, 1854. She was only ten years of age when her parents moved to Tecumseh. She received a common school education in this village, and prior to her death she had been teaching school for the last three years in South River, Maryland. She taught school within three weeks of her death. She had started home and got to Annapolis, Md., when instead of coming directly home, went to visit her sister, who taught school in West River, Md., where she died. Her father reached there Jan. 3, and brought her remains home Tuesday night, Jan. 6. Her funeral was held at the Episcopal Church, of which she was a member, Jan. 7, at 2 P. M.

Josie F. Turner's tribute to the memory of her sister Oakella:

My dear sister, how I loved you,
God in heaven alone can tell;
Now I grieve and sadly miss you,
Darling sister, fare thee well.

God knew best, he took our darling,
Up with him in heaven to dwell,
From this lowly vale of sorrow,
When her mission was done well.

She was loved by all her scholars;
She had learned the right from wrong;
She has gone from earth to heaven,
There to sit around the throne.

She was our oldest sister,
Dearest loved of them all;
She has only gone before us,
There to dwell with Him at home.

I had thought He dealt unjustly,
And might spare her to live long,
But forever the Great Ruler
Always keeps the right from wrong.

TURNER—In Macon, Lenawee Co., Michigan, October 6, 1879, Lorraine B. Turner, in the 59th year of her age.

Mrs. Turner was born in Seneca Co., New York. Her maiden name was Smith. In her nineteenth year she was married to John H. Osborn, of Ovid in said county, and in October, 1845, came with her husband to Michigan and settled upon the farm where both have since died. The deceased will be remembered as a good neighbor and as an affectionate and faithful wife and mother. Her diligence and energy in the common duties of life were seldom surpassed. In the care of her children and family nothing was withheld that she could possibly bestow. She bore the sufferings of her last sickness with christian resignation and died in full assurance of a happy hereafter. COM.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WHAT CONGRESS IS DOING.

The Financial Discussion—Foreign Missions—The Suffrage Convention.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 23, '80.

The discussion of the now famous "Bayard resolution" has finally began, and there is no telling where it may end or how much of a "tearing up" of party lines it may result in. I do not think the leaders of either party, outside of a few men like Bayard, feel like pushing the financial question very much. Undoubtedly a majority of both sides incline to the "let-well-enough-alone" policy, but if discussion runs on the Democrats are likely to suffer most by it—in disorganization, and demoralizing results. On the authority of one of the best informed and most prominent Democratic Senators, it may be stated that fully three-fourths of the Democratic Congressmen are opposed to the financial policy of Senator Bayard, and intended quietly to secure the defeat of his resolution now pending. In the opinion of Alexander Stephens and other gentlemen of about equal prominence, the greater majority of the Democratic Representatives favor an unlimited coinage of silver, such coinage being upon the same basis as the coinage of gold. They also desire the assaying and stamping of gold and silver bars, and the issue of gold and silver certificates in denominations as low as one and two dollars. This is to do away with the inconvenience caused by the circulation of much heavy metal. Holding such views, the Democrats are naturally hostile to the measure proposed by Mr. Bayard, and were it not for the Presidential contest so close at hand, they would at once commence the most aggressive, bitter, and outspoken warfare against it. They are silent now, only for the sake of party unity; and in the hope of securing such unity, the present program is to defeat the Bayard resolution with as little noise as possible.

The important foreign missions so long vacant have at last been filled. Perhaps the country would not have suffered very much if the appointments never had been made, at least there are a great many who think so, and it is really not apparent what good the service does anybody. The difficulty in filling the vacancies was not so much to find somebody to take the appointments as to get the kind of men suitable for them. There are plenty of politicians who will take anything, especially a position of such high honor, with a fifteen or twenty thousand salary attached. But if the country proposes to keep the thing up at all it is desirable to send representative men to the leading European courts. Wealth and influence are not the only qualifications, but a degree of culture and respectability is also requisite. The appointments made in these cases are considered very good, especially that of James Russel Lowell for the court of St. James. For the Spanish Mission, from which he is promoted, ex-Gov. Fairchild, of Wisconsin, has been named. The latter is not likely to enjoy the change, as it takes him from Paris, where he has been having a gay time in society of Minister Noyes. However, the Spanish bull fights may console him in a measure. The promotion of Jno. W. Foster, of Indiana, from Mexico to Russia is a good one; but it's quite a change of climate from turbulent and red-hot Mexico to snowy St. Petersburg.

A Presidential boom has been started for Senator Ferry, of Michigan. The old girls of the Woman Suffrage Association, now in session here, are working it. Senator Ferry introduced a bill this week proposing a sixteenth amendment to the constitution giving the ballot to women, and they now propose to make him their candidate. A rich bachelor like the Senator is pretty sure to be a favorite with the ladies, and no doubt there is danger to the other candidates in this movement. But a Washington paper says they had better conciliate Mr. Ferry first. He is so strong in his bachelorhood, and so conscious of his marriageable eligibility that he bolts and locks his bed-room door every night in order to preserve himself from imaginary feminine raids.

The Suffrage Convention embraces all the well-known women engaged in the movement, and as many new ones as they can muster. They are a pretty smart lot of girls, but with a decided leaning to the strong-minded. Susan B. Anthony, Sara Spencer and Mrs. Lockwood are the leaders. But the trouble with the movement is that they have more trouble to win over the better class of their own sex than to get the consent of the "lords of creation" for them to vote.

Burglars entered the office of F. W. Stack, proprietor of the Hillsdale City Mills, on Wednesday morning, of last week, and blew open the safe, taking therefrom $38.35—all the money it contained. The tug worked her way into the ice, which was broken up into cakes, about a mile and a half, when night came on, and they were compelled to stop and run to Beaver Island. The following morning they returned to the ice field and explored it, but could find neither the boat nor the bodies of the unfortunate castaways. The probabilities are that the boat sank, carrying the bodies with it.

Red Ribbonism.

The Red Ribbon State Central Committee met at Ann Arbor on Thursday afternoon.

Capt. Bontecou was elected Secretary of the committee.

R. E. Frazer, of Ann Arbor, chairman, announced the object of the meeting, chiefly a constitutional amendment and the question of speakers. He also stated that Mr. Bratshaw, of Detroit, had been appointed member for the First District.

Capt. Bontecou presented the form of petition used by him in his meetings, and after discussion that petition was adopted. It is as follows:

To the Honorable the Legislature of the State of Michigan:

We, the undersigned, being citizens of and voters in the State of Michigan do hereby petition the Honorable the Senate and house of Representatives to submit to the people for ratification or rejection at the spring election in 1881 an amendment to the Constitution, as nearly as possible self operative in terms, and prohibiting under sufficient penalties the manufacture and sale of alcoholic malt and vinous liquors, except for mechanical, medicinal and sacramental purposes under proper regulations.

The question of the proposed constitutional amendment, relating to prohibition, was taken up and discussed at length. Finally the Secretary of the committee was instructed to draft such amendment and submit it to a sub-committee, to be reported by them to the Central Committee, and when approved by the latter to be published as the basis of their operations.

The question of organization was then taken up and, upon motion of Capt. Bontecou each member of the committee was made responsible for the organization of his own district.

It was decided that the gentleman in charge of each district call a convention of Red Ribbon clubs, Women Christian Temperance Unions and all other temperance organizations as soon as possible, for the purpose of erecting a District Central Committee, of which the said member of the State Central Committee shall be Chairman ex officio. Arrangements shall also be made by the district convention for the calling of county conventions to represent all the temperance elements of the county and the appointment of a County Central Committee, which shall take charge of the organizations of the county by townships.

NORTHERN LENAWEE FARMERS' CLUB.

(This Club will hold its meetings regularly on the first and third Thursdays of each month, at the Reform Club Hall in Tecumseh, at 2 o'clock P. M. until further notice. All are heartily welcomed and cordially invited to attend. Communications thankfully received. Correspondence solicited from other clubs, especially where co-operative action can accomplish desirable results. All letters should be addressed to E. L. RUSSELL, Sec., Tecumseh, Mich.)

THURSDAY, Jan. 15, 1880.

All branches of business have seemed to revive with the new year. Railroad fever is again raging high. Prices of produce have advanced a small percentage. The improvement in the Tecumseh HERALD is very material and conspicuous. And the spirit and attendance of the Farmers' Club today was more encouraging.

Mr. A. G. Hall sent in his resignation as one of the Vice Presidents, having engaged in teaching and not being able to attend regular. Mr. R. R. Hall was elected to fill the vacancy.

A communication was read from D. S. Curtis, in which he stated that the reports of wheat which he had received from Lenawee county, were equal to any he had received in yield, although he had received reports from many States.

Mr. F. DePuy wanted information concerning foot rot among sheep. Some members thought it commenced between the claws of the foot, and that sheep were subject to it without coming in contact with the matter from infected [illegible] that it could be cured, and [illegible] but one application, and [illegible] upon our high sandy and gravelly soils it could not be held but would run out. Other members remembered a flock of about 200 sheep on one of our high gravely farms where the foot rot ran out, when the sheep all died and not before. While a majority of those who had experience with genuine foot rot agreed with Mr. Goodrich, who said that he had had $1,200 or $1,400 worth of experience with it, and had tried lime, and all the medicines he could hear of recommended for it, and some very powerful medicines, and got rid of it only when he got rid of his sheep. It commenced in the bottom of the foot between the frog and the shell of the hoof. When it commenced between the claws it was not foot rot. It came by contageon. Cure—dispose of your sheep. Preventative—extreme caution in keeping clear from contamination.

The subject of horse shoeing was next taken up and discussed with spirit and animation, both the advantages and disadvantages. I will not try to reproduce the arguments of each as I could not do them anything like justice. Some agreed that it was a useless and unnecessary expense, and often an injury; that it was only practiced because the owners had been educated to believe a horse must be shod, and that the horse had been educated to rely upon a shoe until he thought he could not go without one. Horse farriers and blacksmiths all disagreed because they had never been able to arrive at a positive conclusion or establish a fact in the case. And that it was thwarting nature in her course, while we should follow the example set before us. While others asserted that it was impossible for some horses to work without being shod at all at any time of the year; that a horse could pull no more than his own weight upon the ice without shoes; that all veterinary surgeons and good blacksmiths agreed upon one point, that a horse must be shod in some way to do good work; that if they should succeed in making all believe that shoeing was unnecessary it would rob blacksmiths of their employment; that it was thwarting nature if we worked a horse at all, or interfered with his will nature in any way; that if we followed examples strictly, we would all be riding as Christ did when he entered Jerusalem.

It was moved to take up the following subjects for discussion:

First in order for Feb. 5, at 1 o'clock P. M.—The subject of Insurance, or more particularly, insuring against steam while threshing, by request of the President of the Farmers' Mutual Insurance Co.

Second in order for Thursday, Feb. 19, at 1 o'clock P. M.—The subject of Fencing.

Third in order for Thursday, March 4, at 1 o'clock P. M.—The subject of Setting Orchards.

Fourth in order for Thursday, Mar. 18, at 1 o'clock P. M.—Practical Farming.

I take the following from the report of the Lenawee Farmers' Club, as published in the Press:

"On motion of J. W. Helm, the Northern Lenawee Farmers' Club was invited to attend the next regular meeting of the Lenawee Farmers' Club," which adjourned to February 3, at 10 o'clock.

The next meeting Thursday, Feb. 5, at 1 o'clock P. M. Subject as above.

A WORD TO FARMERS' WIVES.

Ladies don't like to read long articles in papers, which relate to work on the farm; but this one is to relate to a subject in which you, ladies, are especially interested, viz: How to secure plenty of vegetables and small fruits for your tables.

The "Lords of the Manor" are too busy in planning and working to grow large crops of corn—to make whisky of or convert into swine's flesh—to give any thought as to what to do or how to do it, to secure plenty of those nice edibles which you and the children prize so much. A strawberry is an insignificant thing compared to a 400-pound hog, or a steer which "will dress 600 pounds!"

But you know that they enjoy a dish of "strawberries smothered in cream," or a dish of nice raspberries or blackberries as well as you do, when set temptingly before them, and you may have to use this fact as an argument, over and over again, in inducing them to do their part toward providing these delicacies.

The same facts and arguments (except the "delicacy" and "smothered in cream" parts), hold good in reference to the kitchen vegetables.

It is an easy matter, and as certain of success as raising a crop of corn, to accomplish all this.

During the comparatively leisure hours of this winter (for we know the dutiful housewife on the farm has little or no absolutely leisure time), look over the lists of reliable growers of small fruit plants and vegetable seeds and decide upon a few kinds which seem best suited to your wants, and then get a pledge from the husband, brother or son to set apart a small strip of ground not far from the house, and, in early spring before farm work begins, cover it well with fine manure. Let this strip be long enough so that everything sown or planted can be tilled one way with a horse; for a little square garden patch, which must be dug up with a spade and cultivated with a hoe, is almost sure to be neglected.

All sorts of vegetables and fruit plants (except grapes) may be planted in rows, the long way of the strip, three to three and a half or four feet apart.

As early in the spring as the ground is dry enough to be cultivated without afterward becoming lumpy—and you will have to rely on the judgment of the out-door worker for this—have about three-fourths or four-fifths of the strip plowed, and made fine by the harrow and clod-smasher or roller. This portion is for the small fruit plants and the peas, lettuce, radishes, early cabbages, and other sorts not injured by slight frosts; the remaining portion should be fitted later, say about the last week in April or the first of May—for sweet corn, beans, etc.

Have the ground marked out as above hinted; rows for peas and strawberries may be three and a half, and for raspberries, currants and gooseberries four feet apart. All other vegetables, etc., may be planted three feet apart; then the shovel plow, or adjustable diamond-tooth cultivator may be run between the rows every week to keep the weeds down and the ground loose and damp.

This is but an hour's work each week, and the husband or father who will not spend this amount of time for the work—well, well, it isn't best to make any threats. Pleasant words, spoken soon after he has enjoyed a good dinner, will secure the work and also gain permission for John, the hired man, to clean out the weeds along the rows when necessary.

New York, March, 1876.

Giles & Co.—Gents: I have for more than one year prescribed your Liniment with the very best results. I have found it as an application in inflammation of the lungs (pneumonia) or in pleurisy, one of the very best. It penetrates the tissues or parts rapidly. In cases of irregularity of the heart's action depending on nervous irritation, it acts promptly. After being made acquainted with the combination of your Liniment, and seeing its action in so large a number of cases, I do not hesitate to recommend it both to the public and the profession. Yours truly,

JOSEPH E. SMITH.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its soothing and healing influences. Manufactured expressly with liquorist as well as external disease.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have not space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

EAST RAISIN.

Notwithstanding the condition of the roads and the weather on Friday evening, the Literary Society had a larger attendance than it has had before this winter. The program was one of unusual length and interest, and was well received by all.

Mr. Collingwood, a student of Lansing, was present and favored the audience with some excellent recitations. They consisted mostly of comic pieces and were rendered in excellent style, which kept the house continually in roars of laughter. Mr. Collingwood is well adapted to the art of elocution, and we predict for him a lasting success.

The remainder of the program was as follows:

Vocal Solo—Hattie Beevers.
Recitation—Flora Pease.
Recitation—Jennie Wickwire.
Select Reading—Jennie Beevers.
Vocal Solo—Libbie Richard.
Recess.
Duett—C. S. Lester and Libbie Richard.
Debate—Question: Resolved, That rotation in office is beneficial to the country.
Aff.—B. A. Garlinghouse, A. L. Arner, W. E. Doty.
Neg.—W. Chatfield, F. Rogers, A. Richard.

Judge's decision in favor of the negative.

The question for next week is whether the farmers of Raisin should contribute for the proposed railroad through Tecumseh.

A Birth Day Party.

Last Tuesday evening, Jan. 27th, children, grand-children, relatives and a few of the neighbors and friends of Libni Kelley, to the number of about forty, met at the house of Allen Kelley in Raisin, to celebrate the eighty-first birthday of Libni Kelley. After an hour or two very pleasantly spent in social intercourse, music, etc., all were invited to partake of a bounteous repast provided for the occasion.—When all had been bountifully supplied with the good things and the luxuries of life, the family Bible was brought forward, and after singing a hymn, Rev. Mr. Bartlett who was present, read a selection from the Psalms, and offered up a heartfelt prayer suitable to the occasion. A short time was then spent in a sort of general thanksgiving for blessings received and enjoyed in the past, and in supplications for those hoped for in the future. Then with many wishes that this aged couple might be spared to enjoy many such pleasant occasions, the company separated for their respective homes, feeling that it had indeed "been good to be there." I could but think that it would be far better for the community and for us all if we could have such gatherings oftener. There seems to be a great lack of respect shown by the young and the middle aged, for the old pioneers that are left us. Surely these things ought not so to be. R.

CLINTON.

Dr. and Mrs. A. F. Tuttle started last week Wednesday on a tour to the Pacific coast. After an incessant practice at his profession for over 30 years in our midst, and being worn out with the labors and anxieties incident to such protracted practice, he has deemed it necessary to seek rest and quiet for a few months at least, with a sister, at Santa Burbara, California. But an early return of him to whose skill so many are justly indebted for their health and lives even, will be anxiously looked for, by his hosts of warm personal friends, and more especially those who have unbounded confidence in his superior ability as a successful practitioner.—The Dr. was accompanied on his journey, as far as Chicago, by Mr. Charles Clark, a brother of Mrs. T's. who goes to Dakota with a view of engaging in the mercantile trade there next spring.

Mrs. D. H. Silvers spent last week in Detroit visiting her sister, Mrs. Tucker.

Chas. S. Burroughs has gone to Rochester this state and opened a Drug store there. Charles is a graduate of the school of Pharmacy of Ann Arbor, and having had considerable experience practically already. We bespeak for him a successful result in his new field.

Last Monday Mrs. Dr. Alvord received a telegram from Grinnell, Iowa, her former home, stating that her mother lay at the point of death, and requesting her to come immediately. She left on the afternoon train.

A few of our citizens went over to Adrian last Monday night to hear that prince of modern orators, R. G. Ingersoll, deliver his great lecture on "The Gods." They speak in the highest terms of the lecture, not only as a literary production of the broadest and most liberal range of intellectual thought, but as earnest, able and eloquent plea for man to investigate and think for himself, to form his own opinions and conclusions, and the right to a full enjoyment and expression of the same, whether they set well upon the stomachs of many or few of the children of men.

E. G. Cook & Co., have shipped in a car load of very fine horses which they are to offer for sale at public auction on Saturday next. A good chance to select a farm or carriage team.

Prof. Olney, of the University, gave a temperance talk last Sunday, in the Town Hall at 3 P. M.

John Kimball, of the firm of Randall & Kimball, is still unable to be about. He has been confined to the house most of the time for three months.

The mind of Mrs. Geo. W. Lewis is so much out of order that there is talk of placing her in the asylum at Worcester, Mass.

Geo. W. Zeigler goes to Washington this week to secure a patent on a lathe, got up on a new principle and a new action. It can be attached to any machine moved by foot power.

Friday and Saturday evenings a panorama of "Pilgrim's Progress," is to be exhibited in the Town Hall.

Amspoker, the Ohio horse dealer, sold 14 horses at auction last Saturday.

The M. E. donation for the benefit of Rev. J. Kilpatrick resulted in a purse of $86.

The Congregationalists are still holding meetings every evening.

Mrs. Justus Watson stood on the platform of a veranda holding a horse by the reins; a door swung shut, suddenly, the horse sprang, landing Mrs. W. some eight feet from the platform, forcing her knee cap upward and jarring her system severely.

The missing landlord, H. C. Pope, has not been heard from thus far.

RAISIN VALLEY.

The efforts of the red ribbon club to secure the services of Maine's great temperance lecturer, Neal Dow, has, we understand, been rewarded with a promise from him to that effect, to be fulfilled sometime during the coming spring.

Dr. Morden, of Adrian, will give a lecture before the Seminary students on Wednesday evening of this week. Subject—"History of Medicine."

James Sinclair, of the class of '79, spent last Saturday and Sunday among his old friends in this vicinity. We were glad to see him.

Norris Morey narrowly escaped what might have been quite a serious injury one day last week. While riding his horse to water it became frightened and ran him against a tree, throwing him off and hurting his arm so that he was obliged to wear it in a sling for a few days.

Three of the stately oaks which for so many years have adorned the Seminary grounds have been cut down during the past week, "having served their day." In one a horse shoe was found imbedded in the solid wood, fully eight inches from the surface. We suggest that they be replaced by others during the coming spring—a work for the class of '80.

RIDGEWAY.

The annual donation of the M. E. Church will be held in the church on Thursday the 19th.

C. H. Snedicor spent Friday and Saturday of last week in this village.

Henry Barnes has added to his domains by the purchase of Geo. Dibble's arm.

Dr. Nelson has bought a lot, of Joshua Waring, and expects to move his house onto it.

The new mail carrier, instead of going on horseback, employes a spacious one horse wagon.

The game of ball last Saturday was a fizzle; The Maconers did'nt have sand enough to come to time. Our boys were on the ground promptly, and claim the game by default.

David Coryell expresses his intention of going back on to his farm in the spring.

Somebody shot a valuable dorg for Joseph Exelby, one night last week, which displeaseth him much.

Quarterly meeting next week Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. Saul Rappleye is agent for a new, fangled, riding saw, and has one on exhibition.

The farm house of Noyes Darling of Macon, which contained the Lake Ridge P. O. was destroyed by fire on Saturday morning. Unable to learn particulars.

Samuel Sudlicer met with a painful accident while sawing wood in the woods on Thursday last. He and Wm. Larkin were at work together, and were sawing a log which was balanced in such a way that when the "cut" was off, the log swung around and struck Mr. Sudlicer, breaking his leg below the knee. He was attended by Dr. Loree, and is getting along as well as the nature of his hurt will admit of.

It will hardly do to pass the chandeliers without a word of commendation for the society that has done so much towards giving us more light. They were got into position on last Saturday; and Sunday evening the audience room was bright as noonday. Well done ladies; now for the old matting. That East window too, has exchanged the old unsightly boards for new glass. Now Mr. Santus, where is your argument?

The R. R. canvassing committee had some funny experiences on their rounds. One farmer sought relief by burying himself in a hay loft. But the boys, aided by a strong scent and a light tracking snow, soon brought him to light.

SPRINGVILLE.

Robert Whiteside has sold 40 acres of his farm to Garrett Lee.

John Monaghan lost a horse last week; it was kicked by another horse while running out, breaking his leg.

The farmers that were plowing last week in this vicinity think they will wait a little while until the frost is over.

Fred Groger formerly of this place, now of Jackson we learn is in receipt of a prize. Weight 8 lbs., name not known.

A couple of horses owned by Robert Whiteside and Samuel White passed in their checks last week on account of old age.

The suit between Delos Lewis and Garrett Lee which was to come off last Saturday before Justice Knapp has been discontinued.

Henry Brainly who had one leg broken by a falling tree a couple of weeks ago is around on crutches.

The Singing School at this place under the instruction of G. P. Wright, is preparing for a concert to be given some time during this month. Further notice will be given.

E. and J. B. Ayers, of this place have opened a new store. The store is a fine one and a credit to the place. We understand they calculate to keep a general assortment store which is what we need here. We wish them success. The firm will be known as Ayers Brothers.

Ghosts, Ghosts; it is rumored that a house about one mile west of this village owned by Mr. White which has been used as a tanant house is haunted. Strange noises have been heard there. Some parties passing there late in the evening claim to have seen a light there and the door open and shut. The outside door has been found open several times, and shut by Mr. White and in a short time it would be open again. Mr. Ghost better look a leetle out.

BROOKLYN.

Bishop Harris visited this place last Sunday, and confirmed four at the church, and afterwards Mrs. Collar, at her house. This lady is dying of consumption. He preached both morning and evening, and for once the many who believe differently, agreed that they all heard their own doctrine.

Thursday night was quite cool and the roads not varnished, but Henry Warns, of Jefferson, had a good fire when we got there. The children improved their time above and those of larger growth below, till midnight and moonlight made a retreat necessary. PEARLIE.

SOUTH MACON.

The Red Ribbon club will hold a mush and milk festival at Grange Hall next week Saturday evening. The election of officers will take place at that time, and it is expected that S. C. Stacy will be present and make a few remarks.

The post office at Lake Ridge was destroyed by fire last Saturday morning. Cause unknown. Insurance of $1,700 on house and contents in the Farmer's Mutual.

If you are suffering from a cold, if your lungs are affected, if you are an asthma victim, if you have any trouble with your throat, chest or lungs, we would advise you by all means to buy a Lung Pad. It will give you almost instant relief. See advertisement in another column.

GLEANINGS FROM THE COUNTY PRESS.

Deerfield has one avenue, eleven streets and six alleys.

The Adelphi Press has come down. They are going to spell it "program" hereafter.

Ehrgotte failed to come to time at Blissfield last Saturday. He will appear there some time this month.

Capt. Hadley, of Adrian, is rapidly improving and he will soon be able to attend to his clients again.

Hudson, having got a fine new Opera House, is overrun with public amusements at present.

Hudson Post: On the 16th ult. eight persons were poisoned from eating canned beef, at Circleville, Ohio. The family of L. D. Lyon, formerly of Hudson, suffered from this cause.—While the parties suffered considerably from the poison, none died.

Morenci Observer: The great value of manufacturing institutions to a town is well illustrated in the case of the Morenci Cooperage, as the owner has disbursed in this immediate vicinity the handsome sum of $11,000 for labor and material during the last year.

Hudson Post: John Rorich, of Canandaigua, was arrested last week, and taken to Adrian to answer the charge of selling diseased and unwholesome beef. The complaint was made by Frank McCarty, of Medina, who bought 147 lbs. of the meat to sell to customers. Rorich has given bonds to the amount of 200 dollars for his appearance for examination on the 9th day of February.

Hudson Gazette: Mr. R. Gilliland, so long and extensively engaged here in the manufacture of telegraph pins and brackets, has, we regret to learn, decided to move his business and residence to Mishawaka, Ind., where he will have the advantage of ample water power and better facilities for obtaining lumber for his business. We wish Mr. G. might be induced to reconsider his plans and keep his establishment in Hudson.

Adrian Times: Mrs. Terry, of this city, who was severely injured in the spine at the grand stand disaster, and who for several weeks was totally paralyzed in her lower limbs, was for the first time since her mishap, on Thursday last, enabled to walk about the house without support or assistance of any kind. Her medical attendant, Dr. Jewett, is sanguine that she will now speedily recover the use of her limbs.

Adrian Press: Supervisor Hill, of Palmyra, called upon us this week and tried to make us believe the roads in his town were dusty, but he fooled it in, and the amount of Palmyra real estate that clung to his coat tails and encrusted the seat of his pants, but too plainly contradicted him on the dust business. We've a quarter of an acre of choice Palmyra farming land for sale, that he left in this office.

Adrian Press: At the annual meeting of the Michigan State Insurance Co., Wednesday evening, the following were elected directors: A. Whitney, F. J. Hough, Channing Whitney, J. V. DeFoe, J. C. Hart, W. S. Wilcox, J. K. Boies, J. C. Rowley and A. Wheeler. The directors elected officers as follows: W. S. Wilcox, President; Abel Whitney, Vice President; F. J. Hough, Secretary. A dividend of 10 per cent. was declared.

Morenci Observer: A very silly little yarn appeared in last week's Fayette Record, alleging that we had said that the closing of the saloons in Fayette had injured its general business interests. Now, we have said no such foolish thing, nor have we heard any party here make an assertion of the kind; but we do know that any number of Fayette men have talked, in not very polite language either, that the reform movement "had dried up the business of the town." The Record chap should lecture his own citizens, and not us, on that score.

Deerfield Record: Michael Dailey, one of Deerfield's festive bummers, went to Adrian, about two weeks ago and got on a big drunk. He was picked up and lodged in that city's lock-up to cool off, when he was brought before a justice and fined, with costs, $19 or twenty days in the county jail. Not having the necessary ducats to pay his fine, he is temporarily boarding with Sheriff Cairnes. It is to the credit of Adrian that she has a marshal who has pluck enough to put such bummers in a safe place, and something of a help to Deerfield, as some of her notable characters may get their just dues if they go to that city, which we believe has been the case several times lately.

A MATRIMONIAL EPISODE

Mr. and Mrs. Adams [illegible] married nearly five years and a fortnight. [illegible] time there had been [illegible] upon a very fine matrimonial sea, with a very fine silly craft. But just as the fair [illegible] was [illegible] a [illegible] gambrel.

Mrs. Adams [illegible] into the breakfast room on a certain morning and found her husband still there, although it was past the hour for business. He was so intent upon a newspaper that he did not notice her entrance and when she placed her hand on his shoulder, he started, turned red and crumpled the paper.

"What is it, Ben? What is the interesting?" and she tried to get sight of the paper.

But he drew it away, and gave her a little push from him.

"Nothing, Bella. Nothing not a daily. Only a fellow lost a [illegible] marbles."

"[illegible] it, Ben," snapped [illegible] with affected indifference into the bread [illegible]. He folded the paper [illegible] and put it in his pocket, and bent his head for a good-bye kiss. She kissed that [illegible] but the old boy followed him to the door as usual. As soon as she heard the door close she commenced to walk the floor and to ask herself questions. What made Ben act so queerly? What was he reading that he wanted to keep from her? What had happened, or was going to happen?

No satisfactory answer came to her questions, but after awhile a text of scripture did come, and impressed itself upon her mind, as though it had found just the right time and place to apply. "Be ye, therefore, as wise as serpents, and as harmless as doves."

"Yes, that is what I must be," she said, firmly. "I must wait, and watch, and be still."

When Mr. Adams came home to supper that night he found everything in nicest readiness. He himself was somewhat flurried, his wife was very sure, but she asked no questions. The evening passed on as usual. But when Bella came up from an errand in the kitchen, just before bedtime, her husband had left the room. The door of the room, across the hall was ajar, however, and a light gleamed through. She crept round to a china closet which communicated with this room, and, stooping to the key-hole, looked breathlessly. Her husband sat at a table with that crumpled newspaper before him. He clasped his hands over his forehead, then drew a pencil and a bit of paper from his pocket, and wrote, looking up to the ceiling now and then while his lips moved; but poor Bella, with all her strained attention could not catch a syllable. He rose, walked across the floor, then back, as if from an afterthought, and tearing the newspaper apart, touched half of the sheet with a match, threw it into the open fire place, and watched until it was burned.

Bella rose from her knees, and, hurrying out, was in the sitting-room before her husband. "Wise as a serpent—wise as a serpent," she repeated to herself, to still the quick beating of her heart. But could even the wisdom of a serpent find out this mystery? Bella hoped that it could.

That night she rose softly from her bed and went down into the parlor.—The half of the newspaper was there, and she took it eagerly. It was a Daily Advertiser of a few days before. But of course the secret would be upon the half that was burned. The bit of paper her husband had written upon lay under the table, and she snatched it up with a checked exclamation; but there were only a little figuring, a few straight lines, and the words "Clinton Street" under one of the lines.

"Where is Clinton Street?" Bella asked herself. She did not know.—She had found out nothing. But as she went back to bed with a cat-like tread, she comforted herself with the thought that she would have a Daily Advertiser of that date to-morrow, if there were one in the city.

As soon as Ben was out of the way in the morning, Bella sent her maid on the errand, and lay with her head in the sofa-pillow till she returned.—The latter half of the Daily Advertiser was in very small print. Bella had never a nervousness, but nothing startling appeared until her eyes fell upon an item in "Personals," down in one corner:

"B. A. No. 8 Clinton Street. Four P. M. Wednesday. White glove, right hand. B. A."

Bella grew faint and dizzy. "B. A." Benjamin Adams—that was plain enough. "Clinton Street"—the very words he had written on the bit of paper. What did it mean? How long had it been going on? She crushed the paper in her hand, she stared out at the window vacantly, then finished with a prolongation of sigh and gasp in the sofa-pillow. But her [illegible] came to her, and she raised her head. [illegible] Clinton Street. Four P. M. Wednesday.

For Bella was [illegible] of a pot which had been [illegible] in a hurry. [illegible] was just opening [illegible] could [illegible] Clinton street was.

[illegible] a pleasant, intelligent face and an expression of pity came into it as she looked up at the old lady.

"Can I help you?" "Well, yes, ma'am, I do know where a certain street is, but I don't know exactly how to get there. You just wait till I run into the store shanty and I'll go along with you till I can point it out."

The washer-woman leaned against the fence till the boy came back. He unlocked the gate with a cheery click.

"Now, ma'am, you just follow me, and I'll take you there quicker'n scat. Put your basket on here ma'am, and I'll wheel her along for you."

"My basket isn't heavy, thank you. And I can walking very well if you will only just tell me where Clinton street is."

The boy looked curiously into her face, as though he could not make the connection between it and the voice.

"Well, ma'am, I'd just as liefs as not, seeing as how you're kinder tuckered out, and I hadn't got no other job a rushin' on me. I won't charge nothin', so don't be scart."

The washer-woman placed her basket on the cart, with a little unconscious sigh, which added to the boy's joy. The afternoon was very warm, and in her heavy waterproof she grew dreadfully tired.

After a while the boy spoke up sharply: "See here, ma'am, if you'd a mind to set down on my cart I could take you along as easy as if I was a deliverin' on you. I would save your shoe leather, you see."

"Oh, no!" And the washer-woman turned for a good look at the boy. Freckled faced warts on his hands, patched trousers and boots; but he was wonderfully handsome to her, nevertheless.

"Take a covered carriage with a couple of horses hitched on. I know," said the boy, as he met her eye. "But it's way up street here, and nobody will see you much; and, if they do, it's none of their biz. So just set on and I'll give you a free ride."

The washer-woman dragged herself a few steps farther, and then seated herself gingerly upon the cart. The boy with a lift of the handle placed her in the right position, and she leaned back resignedly, a little sense of relief coming into her tired limbs. They met fashionably-dressed ladies and children, who laughed, and chattered, and turned to look at them. One sweet little girl, dressed in white, threw an orange to the poor, sick washer-woman in the cart. They met some well-dressed, boisterous boys, who commenced to joke and hoot at the washer-woman; but her knight put down his cart-handle and shied pebbles at them till he sent them dodging out of the way.

At last Clinton street was reached. "Here we be, ma'am," said the boy, and the washer-woman alighted and took her basket. She offered the orange to him, but with a scornful flourish he turned his cart and hurried down street.

Clinton street was in the suburbs, and a still, shady street it was. The houses were few and far apart, with plats of grass and strips of bloom between them, and the blue of the river gleamed between the trees on one side.

The washer-woman leaned over gates and went up walks, to see the numbers on the doors. She noticed one house which was in process of repair, and it, somehow, struck her with a peculiar look of familiarity, as though she had seen its bay-windows and little porticoes before. But that was not No. 8, and the washer-woman went on wearily. The street was short, and at its end the river curved in a large white house, with many green blinds all tightly closed. Back of the house, on the bank of the river, was little boat-houses, and there were winding paths leading down to them. The washer-woman's heart beat fast as she saw No. 8 on the door of this house. She opened the gate cautiously, and turned into one of the winding paths, then turned back, and opened and closed the gate again with a very shaky hand.

"I will watch on the other side," she said to herself, as she hurried across the road and leaned against a tree on the opposite side of the street.

Nobody seemed to be stirring in the street; and, except some smell of tobacco which floated off from a window through the shaded yard behind her, there was no sign of life. The washer-woman slyly drew a gold watch from under the waterproof, looked at it and put it back. She stood for hours, as it seemed to her; but the street was utterly deserted, till at length a man in sailor's clothes came upon the other side and seated himself upon a curb-stone near No. 8. The washer-woman began to walk slowly, but the sailor saw the action was watching her. Furtive glances passed from under the slouched hat pulled out from the thicker bonnet of the washer-woman, tried to distinguish and almost deceptive compared with her heavy shoes upon the walk, and the old sailor sat upon the stone with bowed head.

But what could she do? She must keep moving and she could not get far away from No. 8. Minutes seemed hours and hours in which there was nothing but a dead silence with the sailor watching her. Hot as it was a shrill laughter floated through the trees up the street, and then a carriage-load of ladies and gentlemen was stopped with a flourish before No. 8, while the shrubs were thrown open from inside in a wholesale way. The sailor rose, and retreating a few steps, leaned against a tree. The washer-woman stood still and looked intently. She could not see plainly through the trees, and, a little hesitatingly, she commenced to cross the road; but, quickening her steps as she heard the gate close after the party she hurried forward so eagerly that she hit her foot against a stone and fell, and the linens from her basket sprawled and flapped around her. Just then she heard the great front door slam shut, and forgetting her surroundings, she groaned heavily.

"Are you hurt?" inquired a familiar voice beside her, and looking up she met the sailor's eyes. They looked at each other, then the washerwoman burst into tears and rubbed her ankle.

"O Ben! Ben!"

"Bella Adams! What in thunder!" then he checked himself. "Is your ankle hurt?"

"I guess not," she said, wincing a little as he raised it.

"What did you dash over here like a streak of lightning for?" he asked.

"I wanted to see if you were in that carriage."

"Me? Thunder! Well, I wasn't.—I was looking to see if you were there."

"I? How could I be there? What made you think so?"

He did not answer, but scraped up a few of the linens and stuffed them into the basket.

"Are these your duds? What in—well no matter! Let us get out of this as soon as possible," and he took the washer-woman on one arm, and her basket on the other, and they went on together, a comically crest-fallen looking couple. They walked a short distance, then the sailor swung open the gate to the unfinished house on the street.

"Lucky the carpenters don't work to-day, and lucky I've the key," he said, as he drew the washer-woman along. He entered a large unfinished room, and, after lifting her into the shavings on a carpenter's bench, seated himself by her side.

Neither of them were in a hurry to speak; but they looked at each other in a shame-faced way. At last he said: "Where is the white glove, right hand?"

"Where is yours?" she returned.

Gradually an explanation was reached, and the sailor laughed boisterously, and slapped his knee, and inquired if anybody wanted to see a couple of lunatic idiots; and the washer-woman cried on his shoulder, and sobbed out repentance and explanation.

"Now listen to the awful catastrophe," he stopping his laughter suddenly. "You know how much we've wanted a house of our own, and how we've drawn plans, and talked it over and over. Well, I had a chance to buy this place at a bargain, and I thought I would fix it up as near as I could to those nice little plans of yours, and surprise you on the next anniversary of our wedding, five years, you know. The paper that killed you had a notice relating to the property sold with my name in it. You didn't condescend to look at that, I suppose, did you?"

"Oh, no! And you have made bay windows and all just as we've planned so many times! It seemed just as if I were acquainted with this house.—And I was—in Spain! O Ben, I should think you'd perfectly hate me for being so prying or jealous!"

"Well, I do awfully," said Ben.—"But I mustn't throw stones, for I live in a glass house myself."

"So you do!" said Bella, gleefully. "To think of your putting yourself in that rig and coming to watch me!—But who do you suppose the 'B. A.' is?"

"I'll give it up. We didn't either of us imagine there could be another 'B. A.' beside our precious selves in creation. Though it was natural I should think it meant you—that little scrap looked up in your desk, and put in mourning with lead-pencil marks, as though you were conscience struck."

"I don't blame you," said Bella.—"It was I who was the fool."

Ben was too much of a gentlemen to let her monopolize the term, and it was divided between them squarely.

"What sort of a house is No. 8?" asked Bella, when that matter was settled.

"It is a sort of restaurant," said Ben. "It is considered a respectable place so far as I know. They have beds to rent, and the young folks come up from the city along toward night and have suppers and ice-cream under the trees. That's all I know about it."

After a while the washer-woman, leaning upon her sailor husband's arm, walked around the unfinished house, and went into raptures over the folding doors, the cupboards, and nooks and corners, that were so like those in the "plans." Then they went down through the trees to the bank of the river, and he helped her in a retired place, looking out upon the boats.

Soon after Mr. Ben Adams drove up in a close carriage, and took the washer-woman away. A boy who did errands around the city, with a cart, was sought out by Mr. Adams and befriended. Mrs. A. had tokens of friendship to bestow upon this boy, when he was afterward very often thrown in her way. The boy did not know the cause of this sudden friendship; but it seemed to him, somehow, as if he had seen Mrs. Adams or heard her speak before, though which it was, or where, he did not remember.—Arthur's Home Magazine.

YOU SHOULD TAKE IT.

In Point of Excellence It is Unsurpassed, and Every Family Will Appreciate it and Enjoy Its Perusal.

Every man should make his home as comfortable and attractive as possible.

A most essential requisite to that end is a good newspaper. The perusal of such a newspaper not only instills in the rising generation a love of home but is a constant incentive to improvement. Simply as an educator, and aside from all other considerations, no parent should forego taking into his family THE DETROIT FREE PRESS.

For the year 1880 we have to offer the standard features which have made THE FREE PRESS the most popular journal in the world, and with such additions as will prove of special interest to Michigan readers.

Addressing more particularly the farmer, we take extreme pains to procure complete and accurate market reports. They embrace farm products of every character, including live stock. The quotations, corrected to the day of publication, from all the leading cities, as well as those of Detroit, are given each week.

A carefully organized system of regular correspondence throughout Michigan will give the readers early and complete intelligence of all happenings in the State.

At this point we wish to remind readers that the best and fullest reports as well as the earliest news of all important affairs, whether happening in Michigan or elsewhere, will be found in THE FREE PRESS. We might refer to the two most recent and terrible disasters in Michigan—the Adrian grand stand horror and the Jackson railroad accident—as examples, reinforced on frequent occasions by accounts of great public events which THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS has laid before its readers in advance of its contemporaries.

No newspaper has brighter or more intelligent editorial comments on the leading topics of the day.

None surpass it in candor; none equal it in literary merit; none approach it in spice, sparkle and vivacity.

Its correspondence by its superior excellence, has attracted great attention, and in this especial department The Free Press is acknowledged to stand at the very front.

Readers of The Free Press will receive through its columns an intelligible idea of new books of merit as they are from time to time published. Literary extracts and discriminating reviews appear every week.

Attention is given to historical topics, and articles having special reference to our own State are in preparation.

"THE HOUSEHOLD."

Every issue of THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS is accompanied by "The Household," a supplement devoted to social and domestic topics, flower culture, fancy work, toilet and cooking recipes and household matters generally. It is furnished without extra charge, and every purchaser or subscriber to The Weekly Free Press is entitled to receive a copy.

To sum up, all must conclude that The Weekly Free Press and The Household—a supplement which accompanies every issue—though furnished together for $1.50 a year, compare in the amount and excellence of contents with the best of the four dollar magazines.

The Weekly Free Press and "The Household" together are furnished at $1.50 a year.

OUR CHIP BASKET.

Working between meals is what wears out the tramp.

Feelings cannot be relied upon as judges of right and wrong.

Many a crooked back boy has made a straight forward man.

It is the boss printer who takes an honest boy and makes a devil of him.

It is not easy for a man to regulate his income by his expenses, and he must try and guage his expenses by income.

"Never let a cold run," says a cough medicine advertisement. This is bad advice. Always let a cold run. But it run so fast that you can't catch it.

The small boy who reached up the chimney for another Christmas present said he found something that sooted him.

The boy who hasn't gone through both heads of his Christmas drum by this time has at least set his old grand mother crazy and driven away the cook.

An old bachelor accidentally dropped his false teeth into a grate of burning coals. "Never mind, uncle," said his nephew, "it isn't the first time I've known you to grate your teeth."

"Oh, sis!" exclaimed the mother, when her little girl spilled her ice cream. And the funny man at the other end of the table, remarked—"That's an Oh-'sis in the desert."

"I say, Jim, if five and a half rods make a perch, how many will make a pickerel?" "You just tell me, first, if two hogsheads make a pipe, how many will make a meerschaum?"

"Never leave what you undertake until you can reach your arms around it and clench your hands on the other side, says a recently published book for young men. Very good advice, but, "what if she screams?"

Observing little brother's remark before a room full of company—"I know what made that red mark on Mary's nose: it was the rim of John Parker's hat." And there are girls who believe that little brother's never go to Heaven.

The grandma of a little four year old told her not to say people lied, but rather that they were mistaken. Subsequently, to amuse her, she told her a bear story, which was a tough one to believe. After she had finished, the little one looked up to her face and exclaimed: "Grandma, that is the biggest mistaken I ever heard."

An old gentlemen reproved his nephew for fighting with another boy. "But," said the lad, "he called my sister names." "Why, you haven't any sister, and never had one!" exclaimed the old gentlemen. "I know it," replied the boy, doggedly; "but he thought I had, and said she was squint-eyed, and I sailed in on the principle of the thing."

Oh! that Monday could be postponed to the middle of the week. Everything goes wrong side up on Monday morning. People get out of their bed in a huff, eat Breakfast because they are obliged to, and come down town in a fit of the sulks. The fact is Sunday just gives rest enough to make a man feel the need of more, and Monday finds him mad because he cannot get it.

Montreal Heard From.

L. Mosely, of Montreal, Canada, certified Sept. 27, 1879, that he had suffered terribly from dyspepsia, and was completely cured by taking Warner's Safe Bitters. He says: "My appetite is good, and I suffer no inconvenience from eating hearty meals." These Bitters are also a specific for all skin diseases.

Scene—Passenger depot, Characters—Atlanta negro and country darkey. Colloquy opened by the Atlanta negro:

"Wher' you goin' buddy?"
"Duz you own dis shed?"
"No."
"Ner none er deze kyhrs?"
"No."
"Ner none er dese yer railroads?"
"No."
"Ner no tavern?"
"No."
"Well, den, yer don't wanter come buddyin' me, an' you don't want no infamashun. De kinder informashun wa't you'd get out'n me'd be mighty ap' fer ter sour on yer."

Feels Young Again.

"My mother was afflicted a long time with Neuralgia and a dull, heavy, inactive condition of the whole system, headache, nervous prostration, and was almost helpless. No physicians or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters, with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over 70 years old.—We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family."—A lady, Providence, R. I.

OUTDONE BY A BOY.

A lad in Boston, rather small for his years, works as an errand boy for four gentlemen who do business there.—One day the gentlemen were chaffing him a little about being so small, and said to him:

"You never will amount to much; you can never do much business; you are too small."

The little fellow looked at them.

"Well," said he, "as small as I am, I can do something which none of you four men can do."

"Ah, what is that?" said they.

"I don't know as I ought to tell you," he replied.

But they were serious to know, and urged him to tell, what he could do that none of them were able to do.

"I can keep from swearing!" said the little fellow.

There were some thoughts on four manly faces, and there seemed to be very little anxiety for further information on the point.

A Love Story in Brief.

A pretty story is told of M. Frere-Orban, the Belgian premier. His original name simply was Frere, and he was in love with an aristocratic Mlle. Orban. As long as he was a poor law-student his hopes to possess Mlle. Orban were very slight. Finally his day of examination for entering upon the public service came, and the young lady invited him, if he got through successfully to met her in the theatre. "But will your family tolerate my presence in their box?" "Wait and see," was the answer. He was successful, he went, and Mlle. Orban kissed him in public. The parents consented to the match, on condition that Frere would add their name to his own.

A Flying Four-footer.—Somewhere down in the wilds of Jersey—if Jersey has any wilds these present Centennial days—one McDaniels dwells, in all the patriarchal comfort and dignity which attach to the English Lord of the Manor. He has a park, a stately mansion, groves of timber, and above all, the most famous racing stables in America. These royal establishments contain some of the finest and fleetest horses in the world. Among them is Harry Basset, a monarch of the turf, who some time ago met with an accident to one of his slender and priceless limbs. Without wasting a moment in doubtful experiments, Mr. McDaniels applied some of Giles' Liniment Iodide Ammonia, and in half a day the horse was as sound as the proverbial silver dollar. No wonder McDaniels tells Dr. Giles to send skeptics to interview himself and his horse in Jersey.

Nature has placed mankind under the government of two sovereign masters—pain and pleasure. It is for them alone to point out what we ought to do, as well as determine what we shall do. On the one hand the standard of right and wrong; on the other the chain of causes and effects are fastened to their throne.

A Rochester Physician's Experience.

R. Calkins, M. D., of Rochester, N. Y., certifies Oct. 6th, 1879, that he has used the Safe Kidney and Liver Cure in his practice for diseases of the kidneys and liver, and the result has been satisfactory in the extreme. He says: "I would now prescribe the same remedy to all similarly afflicted, and you are at liberty to so state in your testimonials."

FINELY POWDERED.
HIGHLY PERFUMED.

The strongest and purest Lye made. Will make 12 pounds of the best Perfumed Hard Soap in 20 minutes without boiling.
The best water-softener made.
The best disinfectant.
The following are some of the advantages obtained by using Lewis' 98 Per Cent. Powdered Lye:

First. It is packed in an iron can with a slip or removable lid, easily taken off and leaving the contents exposed, thereby saving the trouble, annoyance, and balance from glass jars, particles of which, after Lye, which, being sold in the cans, must be broken with a hammer to get the Lye out.
Second. It being a fine powder, you can remove the lid and pour out all the contents, being always ready for use.
Third. A teaspoonful or more can be used as in water-softening, sprinkling, etc., and the lid returned to the can, will thereby save the balance of contents. With other Lyes all must be dissolved at once and used in a short time, or the strength is gone.
Fourth. Absolute purity. Free from all adulterations.
Fifth. The best soap can be made in from ten to twenty minutes with this Lye.
Sixth. No failure is possible in making Soap with this Lye when the simple directions given are followed.
Seventh. One can of this Powdered Lye is equal to twenty pounds of Sal Soda or Washing Soda.
Eighth. One can of this Lye will saponify one pound more of grease than any other Concentrated Lye, Ball Potash, or Saponifier.
Ninth. This Lye is 25 per cent stronger than any other Lye or Potash.
Tenth. One to two teaspoonfuls will soften a pail of water for market soap.
Eleventh. One teaspoonful will thoroughly cleanse Sinks, Drains, or Closets.
Invaluable for killing Roaches, Mice, Rats, etc.
The best article for washing Trees.

THE RAILROAD OUTLOOK.

The joint railroad conference held in Tecumseh last Tuesday demonstrates this fact conclusively, that the Toledo & Milwaukee Railroad can be secured on the Tecumseh and Addison line provided every town on the line does its full duty. Mr. Latcha, the President of the road, was present at this meeting, and met the delegates from the different towns in a spirit of fairness. The amount required is not excessive for any township, and could be raised, every dollar, in two weeks time with proper effort.

All the light and information we can gather on the subject confirms and strengthens our belief that the Toledo & Milwaukee railroad is certain to be built within the next few months.

In the second place it is certain to be under the control of the Pennsylvania Railroad, which will give us not only a competing line to Toledo and thence to New York, but also an outlet to Philadelphia and Baltimore. It will also place us upon an important through line between Toledo and Grand Haven, which line will at once assume a position equal to that of the present Detroit & Milwaukee road.

It is needless to go into any argument to prove the utility of this road to every town through which it passes. Public sentiment has become crystalized on this point and there seems to be only one view now entertained on this subject by those who have investigated it. A late issue of the Adrian Times, in speaking of the new Detroit and Butler project, says:

The people of Adrian will aid this enterprise because they believe another railroad will be a benefit to Adrian in bringing new industries here, which means more citizens, and directly in giving the city competing freight routes, thus placing it on the same plane with other places in competing for new industrial and manufacturing enterprises.

We are a little surprised to see such language in an Adrian paper, but it is true nevertheless. And if a mere branch of the Wabash road, which will be another feeder for Vanderbilt's N. Y. Central, will be of so much benefit to the towns located thereon, of how much greater benefit will the Toledo & Milwaukee be to the towns on that line.

Again, the meeting here last Tuesday showed that the Toledo & Milwaukee road is fairly within our reach. Every town on the line has been well organized, and has raised something, and a portion of them have the bulk of their quota already pledged.

But two things are necessary to secure the road absolutely before the 20th of February.

First—Every town must give its undivided support to this project. Their attention must not be diverted from the business in hand by other projects. The Detroit and Butler line is still in its infancy and no one knows where it will go. The owners of the Ypsilanti and Hillsdale road are already making a move to sell that road to the new company, and a strong effort will be made, backed by Gov. Ashley's influence, to use that link of road in the line to Butler.

If Adrian should control the location of that road, it will dodge both Tecumseh and Ridgeway and Dundee. The chances therefore are decidedly against either Tecumseh or Ridgeway securing the road. "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush." Shall we relinquish a road we are sure of by proper effort, to secure a poorer road which we are not sure of anyway?

On the western end of the line our friends in Cambridge and Franklin must not be diverted by Brooklyn influences. Any railroad through Cambridge or Franklin, wherever the line may run, will be of much more value to them than a new road through Brooklyn, leaving them out in the cold. The citizens of those townships must not allow themselves to be enticed by flattering promises from abroad, or by being too exacting about the location of the line, to go against the interests of their own towns.

Secondly—The canvassing committees in every town must go to work and do their duty. They must not let the grass grow under their feet. Every property holder must be visited and every one who is able to assist must be reasoned with until he sees his duty, and pledges his contribution. Let us buckle the strap one hole tighter, gentlemen, and go in to win. This prize is within our reach. We have only to stretch forth our hands and grasp it. We believe that every town on the line will be able to report her quota within the required time.

AMONG OUR EXCHANGES.

Smith Gives It Up.

Chicago News.—Don't address any more letters to Smith as Governor of Maine. He gives it up, and is going a fishing.

Harrowing Days.

New York Tribune.—These are harrowing days for the man on the fence who wishes to fasten himself to the boom which is going to win.

They Feel Badly.

Adrian Times.—The people of Maine feel badly over the thought that they can't have but one governor and one legislature. They will feel better about it when pay day comes.

Will Be Discontinued.

Cincinnati Enquirer.—If Mr. Tilden should be re-elected President, and assume the duties of the office, the Sunday evening services of song at the White House will probably be discontinued. Mr. Tilden is not a singer, and he will not have Schurz to play on the organ.

What Bob Is Expected to Do.

Cincinnati Enquirer.—There is talking of sending Colonel Bob Ingersoll to the Republican National Convention as a delegate from the District of Columbus. Ingersoll is still for Blaine, with Grant as second choice. He will be expected to disport himself impromptu, as he did in 1876.

Worth More than Tilden's Barrel.

New York Tribune.—The Democrats elected one President on the issue of "54° 40' or fight." As they are sadly in need now of a good cry to go to the country on they might try "Canadian annexation or fight." If they could rouse up the British lion and get him to give one or two feeble roars, it would be worth to them more than Mr. Tilden's barrel.

Roscoe Means Business.

Atlanta Constitution.—If Grant should conclude that a third term is either undesirable or unattainable, would the man who carries the Republican party of New York in his pocket sit still and let either Sherman or Blaine—his two great enemies—walk off with the Presidency? Not much. Roscoe has made up his mind that the next President must be Grant or himself, or a Democrat. He means business.

Dodging the Currency Issue.

New York World.—Republican Senators as a rule do not seem to take an active interest in the financial question. While professing their horror of all action tending to promote sectional hatred, whenever there is a chance to wave the bloody shirt the Senate floor swarms with them, but when the currency question is up, that currency question upon which the grand old Republican party is a unit, the Republican Senator hies him to the cloak room.

Two Clowns in the Right Place.

Philadelphia Times.—Horr, of Mich. the big clown of the House, and Congressman Cox, of New York, the little clown of the House, are being overwhelmed with suggestions from the newspapers about what they ought to do. They are advised to join a circus, hire out to a variety show, run opposition to Josh Billings in the almanac business. All this, however, is calculated to entice the illustrious clowns into a peck of trouble. They are just about the right size for the places they are in, and their comic business wouldn't be appreciated anywhere outside of Congress.

Uncle Sammy's Latest Twist.

New York Tribune.—The docility of the Democratic party to Tilden must surprise even that astute person himself. His "twist" recently executed at Albany has been received without protest in all quarters, save among the closest allies of Tammany. There seems to be a general and hopeless acquiescence in the fact that the Sage has the party at his mercy, and that it behooves the party not to exasperate him into offensive action. As for his own purposes, his intimate friends declare that he is undecided whether to force his renomination or not. He wants to be elected, but he doesn't wish to incur the expense of running merely to be defeated. If he declines to run, therefore, it will be equivalent to an announcement that he believes the party has no chance for success.

A Remarkable Winter.

New York Herald.—The winter which is now far spent, seems destined to take a memorable place in the annals of meteorology. Although its extraordinary thermometric ranges, have yet to be fully made up, it bids fair to exhibit the most marked record of sunshine and warmth east of the Mississippi and south of the forty-fifth parallel. The historian has been at pains to chronicle remarkably cold winters, as that of 1812, which as early as November 18 compelled the famous retreat of Napoleon's army from Moscow and turned the tide of European affairs. But little notice has been taken of the remarkably warm winters, which probably exert no less decisive an influence on national health and wealth, and no scientific work could yield a more practical and magnificent service to the world than an investigation showing the causes of such seasons.

NEWS FROM AN OLD FRIEND.

Alex. Hendry, who formerly lived in Tecumseh, and who now resides at Fayetteville Arkansas has sent us a copy of the Fayetteville democrat. The paper has a description of the Eureka Hot Springs which are located about forty miles from Fayetteville, Arkansas. It says:

Many have been there, who had tried every known remedy, but to no purpose, were cured by this water. The following diseases have been cured by it: Rheumatism, dropsy, scrofula, chronic sores of twenty years standing, dyspepsia, piles, catarrh, asthma, liver complaint, sore eyes, bronchitis, and cancers. It seems to renovate the whole system.

Mr. Woodruff, of War Eagle, whose veracity cannot be questioned, told me, that a neighbor of his M. David, had been afflicted for several years, with lung and kidney disease—had hemmorhage of the lungs, and after using this water four weeks found great relief. He was also bald on the top of his head, about this time the hair began to grow out, and that he is now well and has a nice head of hair, black, like it was originally. It is reasonable to suppose, that disease caused his hair to fall, and that when his health was restored it grew out again. Another man removed a wen from his hand by bathing it.,

Mr. Hendry is still living at Fayetteville, and enjoying good health. John Hendry has "gone west" being now settled in Walla Walla, Washington Territory.

MORE RAILROAD MEETINGS.

Yesterday, rousing meetings were held at Cambridge and Franklin. Mr. Latcha, President of the T. & M. road, remained over here one day to attend these meetings and have a personal interview with the citizens of those towns.

CAMBRIDGE.

Their meeting was held at the cheese Factory at one o'clock in the afternoon. There was a large attendance and Mr. Latcha proceeded to state the conditions on which aid should be raised, the route which would probably be selected, and other details. W. F. Baxter of Tecumseh was introduced who stated what Tecumseh had already done, and what they proposed to do. A resolution was then passed requiring every free holder present to express his opinion and give a pledge of what he would contribute. They all responded generously, many of them doubling their former subscriptions.

FRANKLIN.

A meeting was held at Tipton in the evening and was well attended by the farmers who meant that the road should be built anything too, through Tipton. The meeting was organized by placing Mr. Hannibal Osborn in the chair and Mr. Keeney as secretary. Mr. Latcha then went over the entire ground and explained the project in all its bearings, and also practically settled for them the probable line. W. F. Baxter followed him in a few remarks showing what Tecumseh would do and what Tipton must do to secure the line. Committees were then appointed in each school district with instructions to hold meetings in the school houses, and make a personal canvass, and Tipton has entered upon an earnest effort to raise their quota.

THE rapid increase in the cost of white print paper during the last few months will compel many newspapers to raise their subscription price, unless there is a change very soon for the better. People who have secured their papers for 1880, and paid for them in advance, may consider themselves fortunate.

THE state superintendent of public instruction has tabulated the school census of 1879. It shows that the number of children in the state between the ages of 5 years and 20, is 486,851. The increase since 1878 was 10,045. Most of the increase was in the new counties, and Saginaw county is the most prolific.

G. W. KINNICUTT and H. H. Keyser have just added a trio of prize Plymouth Rocks from Ill., to their breeding yards. The cock, General Custer, won a prize at the great Western poultry show at Chicago, Jan. '79, as breeding cockrell. The hens won prizes at the same show. They also won each a prize at the shows in Ft. Wayne and Indianapolis in '79.

THE masquerade party last Tuesday was a brilliant affair. Excellent music, a good company of masquers, a large audience of spectators, all contributed to the success of the undertaking. Good judges pronounced the music the best quadrille music ever heard in Tecumseh. The receipts from gallery tickets was unusually large, which left a good margin in the treasury of the association, after paying all expenses. The committee in charge have been indefatigable in their effort to make the party a success, and they were rewarded by having their highest hopes fully realized. As we were unable to obtain a complete list of the masquers we refrain from making any special allusion to them. The characters represented were all well sustained, and but few of them could be identified before they unmasked.

THE suggestion below is respectfully dedicated to the Adrian Times: Adrian seems bound to commit suicide. She is urging on a railroad scheme which will build up smaller towns around her, but will ruin Adrian.

We have received from Luther Tucker & Son, of Albany, N.Y., their Illustrated Annual Register for 1880. It is a neat little pamphlet of nearly two hundred and fifty pages, and contains a vast amount of useful information and practical suggestions for the farmer and horticulturist. Every advance paying subscriber to the Country Gentleman will receive a copy of the Annual Register free.

MR. N. M. SUTTON started last Tuesday on his Florida trip. He expects to take very nearly the same route as he did last winter, but will give more attention to hunting. He proposes to shoot some bear and deer before his return. F. R. Stebbins, of Adrian, goes with him, and they expect to be gone about two months. We presume the readers of the HERALD would like to hear from him occasionally.

DR. CATLIN has got located in his new rooms in the second story of the Hewitt Block, and they are certainly a very fine suite of rooms for his use. He has a large commodious room with a private office in front, and a sleeping room with closet in the rear. The rooms are also very neatly furnished with fine carpet and elegant furniture and look more like a parlor than an ordinary office. The Doctor is certainly well fixed.

Admission to all parts of the house, 15 cents; two tickets, 25 cents.

RAILROAD NEWS AND NOTES.

The Joint Committee Meeting in Tecumseh Last Tuesday—Reports from the Different Towns on the Line—The Canvass to be Pushed.

Last Tuesday afternoon was the time appointed for the different railroad committees to meet in Tecumseh, report progress, and decide whether the work should be continued. Delegations were present from Addison, Cambridge, Franklin, Raisin, Tecumseh and Ridgeway. The meeting was held in the Council Building and proved to be more than a joint committee meeting as the room was crowded and many had to remain standing during the proceedings. In the absence of Mr. Hayden, who is away in Ohio, on account of the illness of his wife, Hon. Perley Bills was called to the chair, and Wm. De Mott acted as Secretary.

The chairman announced the object of the conference and stated that the different towns represented would be called upon for reports, after which Mr. Latcha, the President of the Toledo and Milwaukee railroad, would offer such remarks as the occasion demanded.

Addison was first called for, and in behalf of that place Mr. I. N. Hathaway reported that $22,030 had been pledged there, which was all in black and white. The committee had bona fide notes to that amount, and the right of way through the territory alloted to them had been pretty much all secured.

Mr. Jos. H. Smith reported for Cambridge. That town had $6,000 already pledged, and the right of way secured for five miles of the six through their township.

Hannibal Osborn was the spokesman for Franklin. A portion of the right of way had been secured in their town, and about $2,700 pledged on subscriptions.

The report from Tecumseh was that the canvass in this town had been considerably retarded by Mr. Hayden's absence, he being chairman of our committee, but that we could safely rely on $15,000 in notes and verbal pledges, and the right of way had been partially promised.

Ridgeway was then called for. Mr. Justus Lowe who had been engaged in working up the right of way stated that it had been mostly secured across that township. G. P. Waring reported that a canvassing committee had been appointed in each school district, and about $3000 in pledges had already been taken.

E. L. Russell reported for Raisin, that he had secured $525 in notes in his part of the town. Another committee had been at work in the East part of Raisin.

Mr. Latcha, the President of the road was then introduced. He said that he had come to meet the representatives from the various towns in Lenawee county on this projected line and to learn what had been done. The work was not so far advanced as he hoped it would be, nor as it was at the west end of the line at Marshall, Homer and Pulaski. Toledo is also becoming interested and will raise her portion of the necessary aid. No one can fail to understand the importance and advantages of this road. The position of Michigan is such that she has no competition in railroads. Detroit draws nineteen-twentieths of her business and it all goes into the N. Y. Central. The freight rates are less from other states farther West. Competition can only be obtained by going to Toledo, and then seeking an outlet over the Penn. Central and Baltimore and Ohio lines. Mr. Latcha gave some statistics showing the saving of freight rates to Philadelphia and Baltimore over the rates to New York and showing the rapid increase of grain shipments to the two former cities during the past year.

The farmers will be the first men benefited by a competing line, and the business men next. What has been done here is encouraging, but there is a large amount of work still to be done if the towns on this line would secure this road. Whether they get it will depend on their own exertions. It cannot be put into shape without work. He stated that he would be willing to give the towns till the 20th of this month to complete their quota if they manifested a determination to prosecute the work and gave him assurances of their ability to accomplish it.

Dr. Loree, of Ridgeway stated that the Detroit & Butler project was causing a division in their town, but they were making commendable progress, nevertheless.

S. Hillhouse, of Moscow, Hillsdale county, was present and stated that his town had pledged themselves to raise $15,000 and the right of way and that the money would be ready whenever asked for.

The following resolution was then offered and remarks called for thereon:

"Resolved, As the sense of this meeting, that a united and vigorous effort should be made forthwith by the several towns and localities represented here this afternoon, to secure the Toledo and Milwaukee railroad on this line; and to that end, the committees already appointed are requested to push the canvass with all possible dispatch in their respective localities."

Remarks on the resolution were then called for and a running discussion ensued which lasted fully an hour.

Mr. Hathaway, of Addison, said that as to his place, the delegates were ready to vote for the resolution and then go home and help carry it out.—If the resolution is carried by a strong vote Mr. Latcha will undoubtedly be encouraged and be willing to give the towns a sufficient extension of time to raise their quotas.

Samuel Morey of Cambridge favored the resolution. They had labored under some disadvantage in his town but had now settled down to business. A. P. Cook of Brooklyn had been doing all he could to create a division in their town and draw off a portion of their farmers elsewhere, but the confidence in this road is rapidly increasing. He thought the Detroit & Butler project was helping them rather than otherwise.

Hannibal Osborn of Franklin, was heartily in favor of the resolution and said his town would come down with the stamps if they had a little more time.

Horace Holdridge reported that he had received $400 in verbal pledges in his section of Raisin and more could be done there.

G. P. Waring of Ridgeway was in favor of it, and stated that Ridgeway would not be behind but would do her full share.

Mr. Latcha here made some explanation in regard to the manner in which the work would be done, such as preparing the road bed, &c.

The resolution was then put to vote and unanimously carried, not a single vote being given against it.

Remarks were made by several others in regard to the amount expected from each town on the line.

Mr. Latcha then stated what he should expect for each town, and said that if the towns could not or did not raise the amount the road would be built on some other line.

Mr. Bills, the chairman of the meeting, gave his views. He saw by the large attendance at this meeting that the interest in the project was rapidly growing. Many people in Tecumseh had contributed very liberally to this road, but there were conflicting interest here, and at one time it was feared that our trade would be injured by the building up of villages each side of us. Public sentiment, however, had undergone a decided change in this regard. It was now conceded by all that Tecumseh needed this road.—The new Detroit road, if built, only increases the necessity for this line.—He believed the amount asked of Tecumseh could be raised if the work was vigorously pushed.

Mr. Hathaway and Mr. Morey expressed themselves as rather disappointed that there was not a better report from this place.

Justus Lowe, of Ridgeway, said that it depended very much upon the action of Tecumseh. Ridgeway would raise her quota if Tecumseh did, although many people in Ridgeway, would prefer the line through Clinton.

The meeting then adjourned. This conference has given the railroad boom a new impetus. It afforded an opportunity for a free interchange of opinions between all the towns on the line.

Mr. Latcha in his remarks at different times presented a full statement of what the road would be, and what he desired of the different towns on the line.

It was made manifest to every one that all that was necessary to secure the road was a few days vigorous work by every town on the line, and the delegates returned home firmly resolved to push the canvass with vigor.

The canvassing committee of Tecumseh will hold a meeting this evening at Wm. DeMott's office, and make arrangements to prosecute the work at once with earnestness.

EDITOR HERALD: Last Wednesday evening, Jan. 28, in commemoration of the birth day of our son Teddy, myself and wife invited the teacher and children of school district No. 5 to spend the evening at our house. The entire school with their teacher, Miss Monaghan, attended, and we were rejoiced to see the happy bond of respect, not to say affection, existing between teacher and pupils, of which I cannot speak too highly. That district No. 5 may always be so blessed in obtaining such a teacher is our sincere wish.

In Memory of Eva S. Smith.

A light is from their household gone,
The voice we loved is still,
A place is vacant in their home
Which we can never fill.

Not long ago she filled her place,
And walked with us to learn,
But now she's run her mortal race
She never can return.

We saw her fade and waste away
In blissful hope of rest;
We saw upon her sunken cheek
The fatal signs of death.

Afflictions sore long time she bore,
Physicians were in vain;
Till God at last did hear her cause,
And eased her of her pain.

Dearest school-mate, how we loved you,
How we miss you one and all;
But in Heaven we hope to greet you
Where dear friends shall part no more.

Perhaps our time may be as short,
Our days may fly as fast;
Oh, Lord, impress the solemn thought
That this may be our last.

NEWS FROM THE CAPITAL.

The Contest Between Cox and Horr—The Grant Boom in Washington—The Lectures of Father Quinn.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 30, '80.

We have had another quiet week at the capital, with rather more interesting events outside of Congress than in it. Since the great "chinning match" between Sam Cox and Horr of Michigan, the House has not had even a ripple of excitement. Cox has long ranked as the humorist of Congress; and there has been only now and then a feeble effort to deprive him of the title. All the spasmodic attempts, after a temporary success, like that of Mr. Townsend, of New York, have finally failed. Yet Cox is not a real humorist. He does now and then say something witty, however, and being very prolix he succeeds in getting the House into good humor oftener than any of the other humorists. His funny speeches usually possess some literary merit, and, with his remarkable fund of general information, he never fails to be entertaining; but he is as sensitive as the business end of a wasp, and whenever a member undertakes to annoy the House at the expense of Little Sam Cox, he is sure to have all the latter's batteries opened on him. In the discussion of the new rules Mr. Horr referred to Cox as "my genial little friend," and said that the Foreign Affairs Committee of which the latter is chairman had only been engaged in the manufacture of witticisms.

This was enough, and the signal for one of the little New Yorker's best efforts, for he always does best off-hand. He began by showing the necessity for revising the rules. The old rules, he said, had been invented for the purpose not of facilitating but of impeding legislation. The statesmen of that day had not been in favor of opening sluices for legislation, but since then the number of bills in each Congress had increased from 300 or 400 to about 7,000, and therefore a revision of the rules had become necessary. Then replying to the charge of Mr. Horr, he said he had been useful as well as ornamental. All humor in debate, he said, should have a practical object; all great men were, and had been, witty. It was, therefore, no cause of reproach that the Committee on Foreign Affairs had a chairman who sometimes had been accused, but never fairly convicted, of witticism. Laughter was healthy. It was good for the House. It oiled the joints and the countenance, causing it to shine like that of his friend Horr. He asked that gentleman, "Why should the spirit of mortal be proud?" Why should there be proud flesh in the House? If Goliah or Dan Lambert were here would they twit a man like himself about his size? Isaac Newton, when born, was put by his mother in a quart cup. He wished he had a cup to try the gentleman from Michigan with.

To this speech Mr. Horr had to reply, and notice of it being given a day in advance the largest crowd of the session filled the galleries. But the effort was disappointing, though it contained some funny remarks; and after it was all over people began to ask themselves what good had been accomplished by giving up two days to this sort of a blackguarding match. Mr. Cox made one fair hit in the part of his speech ridiculing that great annual swindle, the River and Harbor bill, but both speeches were too personal and clownish for such a place as the Congress of the United States. I only take the trouble to write about it here to give distant readers an idea of the follies Congressmen will at times give themselves up to.

For the want of something better to talk about we are having a lively canvass just now of the chances of different presidential candidates. The Republican organ here is for Grant, "red-hot," and the ex-President has warm support among the older officials and representatives of the party generally about Washington. But the greater activity at the present time is credited to the friends of Senator Blaine and Secretary Sherman, who are said to be setting things up pretty lively all round the bush. Some of the correspondents, notably the specials of the New York Herald and Times, say that the Secretary of the Treasury is bending all the patronage of his Department to secure delegates to Chicago; and there has been a small Garfield "boom" within the last few days, based upon the theory that if Sherman cannot nominate himself he will set up Garfield in preference to all the others.

Besides these rather dry subjects a good deal of attention has been attracted by the lectures here of Father Quinn, an ex-priest of the Catholic church, who stands up and accuses the church and its priests and bishops of all sorts of wicked things. I have not had time to attend one of his lectures, but so much interest has been excited by them that the largest hall of the city will not begin to hold the crowds who flock to hear him.

An enthusiastic railroad meeting in the interest of the Port Huron & Northwestern, narrow guage railway was held at Port Huron on the 27th ult, and apportioned the amounts to be raised by Sand Beach and Sherman at $9,000; Rubicon, $8,000; Gore, $1,500; Huron, $7,000, and Port Austin $14,500. The meeting limited the cost from the Sanilac county line to Port Austin to $40,000, $25,000 of which is already pledged.

"Old Joe," a character well known to the patrons of Bay City, recently commenced a correspondence with a lady in Canada, and after an exchange of photographs, the two were engaged and finally she came to Bay City and met Joe for the first time and was married instanter. But this is not all. She has a sister and Joe has a friend, and once more photographs were flying through the mails, and once more there was a wedding. Neither of the women met their husbands face to face till the ceremony was performed.

Gen. Dwight May, who has been lying ill at his home in Kalamazoo for several weeks, died Jan. 28th. He leaves a wife and one daughter—Mrs. W. M. Brown, of Mt. Pleasant. Dwight May was born at Sandersfield, Berkshire county, Mass., Sept. 8, 1822, and was consequently over 57 years of age at the time of his death. His ancestors for several generations were good old puritan stock. At the age of 12 years he came with his parents to Michigan and went through all the trials and hardships of those pioneer days. He taught school and worked on a farm for several years, and in 1846 entered the Michigan University, and graduated in the classical department three years later. He commenced reading law in the office of Lothrop & Duffield, in Detroit, and afterwards practiced law in Battle Creek, removing thence to Kalamazoo, where he went into partnership with Judge Giddings. He went into the army and was breveted brigadier general, and with his command, was mustered out in 1866. He has held many positions of public trust, including that of lieutenant governor and attorney general of this State, the latter for two terms. Gen. May was an ardent Republican in politics from the time of the formation of that party in this State, and was an earnest and convincing, though not eloquent, speaker.

Poverty and Suffering.

"I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did them no good.—I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well and none of us have seen a sick day since, and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost—I know it.

THE FARMERS' PAGE.

THE HERALD—CULTIVATING WHEAT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 23.

EDITOR HERALD:—Your improved and enlarged journal has reached me, and pleases me much. Its present form is certainly a decided improvement, and you deserve to be amply supported, and doubtless will be.

Lenawee county and surrounding country are a superior wheat region, and the farmers would be wise to adopt all the most successful modes of obtaining the largest possible yield per acre, that can be done profitably. In my forthcoming little book, (now nearly completed and soon to be issued) will be found many new and practical facts and suggestions for rendering wheat culture still more profitable. Many reliable statements and reports have been received from my correspondents in different States, showing the great benefits of planting wheat in wide drills (12 to 14 inches apart) and hoeing it, with either hand or horse hoes. These reports, of those who have fairly tried it, prove the three chief benefits, besides other minor ones, to be: first, larger yield on given space; second, prevention of injury by insects and diseases; and third, saving of seed, also, as a general thing, the straw is stiffer and brighter, while the grain is plumper and heavier.

From these many reports, it appears also that the White Australian and Russian Arnautka are, in most localities, the most profitable spring varieties; the Clawson and Genessee the favorite winter varieties; but Faltz, Gold Medal, Mediterranean, and Victor (Canada) succeed best in some localities. All of them succeed well with proper cultivation and manures.

D. S. CURTISS.

WORK FOR FEBRUARY.

In the Orchard.—Dig around the roots for insects, and put in a little salt and ashes or lime; put back the earth and mulch with leaf-mold, compost, muck, or well rotted manure. Do the necessary pruning, cutting back the outer end of limbs, leaving low ones to shelter the trunk and ground underneath.

The Garden.—Dress and clean the beds and borders; prepare for sowing the annuals,—flowers and vegetables,—arrange for setting out your pot-plants. Get, from the forest, your bean-poles, pea-brush, and crotched, branched stakes, for supporting your tomatoes and vines; and have all ready, under the shed, for use when the ground is fit to work. And give another raking and salting to your asparagus beds. Clear away rubbish and dead stalks of berry brush; give a fine mulching of mold, sawdust, or well-pulverised marsh-muck, which has been frozen and partially dried; clean off the strawberry patch and sprinkle in clean cut straw or sawdust, to keep sand off the berries. Give new banking to the celery ridges, for later use.

Straighten and tie up grape vines, and nip off all the wood-buds but one or two, for new canes. Loosen earth around the roots, and put on fertilizers, such as good leaf-mold, or well-rotted compost, with lime and bone, but no fresh manure.

Fields.—Do all the plowing you can, when the ground is dry enough, in the larger portions of your garden and orchard; clean out and extend your drains, so that they will allow free flowage; and do every kind of necessary work which you can, at this time, so as to have as much time as possible to do what can be done only in succeeding months.

And be sure to open a memorandum or account book, in which to make note of the expense, manner and results of all your operations, for ready reference at any time; and also to note down what you desire to do, and would be liable to forget. It will be profitable, and far more than pay the cost and trouble.

WHAT IOWA GIRLS ARE TAUGHT.

At the Iowa Agricultural College every girl in the junior class has learned how to make good bread, weighing and measuring her ingredients, mixing, kneading, and baking, and regulating her fire. Each has also been taught to make yeast and bake biscuit, puddings, pies, and cake of various kinds; how to cook a roast, broil a steak, and make a fragrant cup of coffee; how to stuff and roast a turkey, make oyster soup, prepare stock for other soups, steam and mash potatoes so that they will melt in the mouth, and, in short, to get up a first-class meal, combining both substantial and fancy dishes, in good style. Theory and manual skill have gone hand in hand. Vast stores of learning have accumulated in the arts of canning, preserving, and pickling fruits, and they have taken practical lessons in all the details of household management, such as house-furnishing, care of beds and bedding, washing and ironing, care of the sick, care of children, etc. The girls, we are informed, are also thoroughly grounded in science, mathematics, and English literature; but this is of slight moment compared with the foregoing catalogue of virtues. If there is anything that challenges the unlimited respect and devotion of the masculine mind, it is ability in women to order well her own household.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

THE FARMERS' INSTITUTES.

The series of Farmers' Institutes which have been lately held, have all been well attended and very successful.

At the Ann Arbor meeting Prof. Beal gave a very instructive talk about the crossing of wheat, and he is now engaged in experiments of crossing the Clawson and Treadwell, to obtain a variety which should combine the good qualities of each. Prof. Beal explained his method of procedure, and a great deal of interest was manifested in the subject.

State Senator J. Webster Childs gave an address upon "Farmers' Organizations." He advocated the formation of local agricultural societies for mutual improvement. In particular, Senator Childs urged the farmers to unite with the grange. He explained the object of that institution, and showed that so far from being antagonistic to the development of the country, or opposed to the interests of the manufacturing or mercantile classes, it was quite the reverse. He called attention to the manner in which railroad corporations had been absorbed, until one could now count upon the fingers the men who controlled the transportation business of the country from the west to the east. He animadverted upon the rise in freight rates, which from the Mississippi to the sea-board had been increased eighteen cents over the rate last year on a bushel of wheat. It showed one of two things: that the railroads were doing a business at a loss last year, or, if not, they were taxing the producing and consuming interests of the country at an excessive figure this year. He could not conclude that last year the railroads did business at a loss, and the fact that the freight rate would not permit of movements in grain at present showed that something was wrong. A wise statesmanship would be called upon to correct this thing and the farmers who were the greatest sufferers by it must put themselves in a position where their influence would be felt.

He was not antagonistic to railroads. No farmer could be otherwise than friendly to them; no one could do without them. They were necessary and deserving of encouragement and protection. They were entitled to make money. He hoped and desired to see them earn good dividends on the actual cost of the roads, but no one could submit to excessive watering of stock and permit large dividends to be paid upon that watered stock without feeling outraged and oppressed.

THE UTILIZATION OF SAWDUST.

A demand having been publicly made for some means of utilizing sawdust, a writer in the Truth says: It is a well-known fact that sawdust by itself alone has been successfully used in growing potatoes. For this purpose it is only necessary to lay on the open ground, in rows from two to three feet apart, the potatoes that are to be planted, and cover the same with a bed of sawdust, say from six to twelve inches thick. If the season is favorable, it is astonishing how this method succeeds. Perhaps it is preferable to prepare the soil by plowing and pulverising, to open furrows two or three feet apart and place in furrows a four-inch layer of sawdust, on this lay the potatoes, lay on another layer of sawdust, and over this a layer of soil. Sawdust may also be employed with advantage about fruit trees; mixed with the soil it enriches the latter, and placed on the surface it maintains moisture and prevents the growth of many troublesome weeds. Sawdust rots as soon as any other vegetable matter, and mixed with the soil it keeps it mellow. If three or four cart-loads of sawdust to the acre be thrown on poor land, and cultivated the same year, it will render it fertile.

Rev. Bishop Gilmour, of Cleveland, Ohio, has used the Great German Remedy, St. Jacobs Oil, and endorses it highly. He writes about it as follows:—I am pleased to say that the use of St. Jacobs Oil has benefitted me greatly, and I have no hesitation to recommend it to all as an excellent curative.

JOSEPH E. SMITH.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is certainly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external disease.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have not space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

A LEAR LITTLE BOY TO MILKMAN: "Hello, I say Mr. Spilkins that 'ere Bob Smith has bin and gone and is tryin' to milk your best cow."

COUNTY AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of the Lenawee County Agricultural society, was held in Dean's opera house in Adrian, last Friday. No business was transacted at the morning session, but after organizing adjournment was had till afternoon.

There were about fifty present at the opening of the afternoon session, and their number was nearly doubled before the meeting closed.

President Horton called the society to order, and after the roll call of the executive committee, the minutes of the last meeting were read by Secretary Mann, and approved.

The president George B. Horton, then read his annual report. The president urged that a liberal policy be pursued by the society, showing no partiality to any manufacture, product or breed.

Secretary Mann's report showed that he had received $1,710.10, and had expended in premiums and other expenses, $2,088.38; paid to the relief committee, $40, leaving a balance of cash on hand of $772.22. Offered in premiums, $2,056; paid up to the date $840; unpaid premiums, about $180.

SPRINGVILLE.

Cambridge has $12,000 pledged on the railroad.

The wood choppers are at work on J. C. Kinney's clearing. Cleave is saving timber for railroad ties.

Look out for the concert at Springville.

Two of our townsmen took the Sir Knight degree at Adrian on Friday night.

George Teachout, of Brooklyn, was in town last Friday. Our railroad committee tackeled him and he responded with $200.

Parties from Jackson and Napoleon have been buying hay from R. L. Rogers and Wm. Geddes and are drawing it to Jackson and bailing it for shipment.

J. H. Smith was called by the Lenawee Mutual Fire Ins. Co. to apprise the damage by fire at Marion Case's last Monday.

The annual meeting of the Cambridge cheese factory association was called for Saturday, Feb. 7th, but on account of not having enough present for a quorum the meeting adjourned one week.

Dudley More lost a piece of a finger last Saturday while removing things from Marion Case's house.

At the railroad meeting held at the Cambridge cheese factory Tuesday about 100 freeholders were assembled. The canvassing committee reported $11,841.00 raised in notes and pledges and recommended the secretary to report to President Latcha that the balance will be forthcoming. Pretty good for Cambridge. Now other points on the line show up and secure the road.

A concert will be given at Ayres' Hall by the Springville class of about 60 scholars, under the direction of George P. Wright, Thursday evening Feb. 19. Good music has been provided and the pieces selected with great care to suit all, consisting of sacred, sentimental and comic songs. Come early to get a seat. Get your buttons well sewed on so you can have a good laugh.

Last Saturday while Marion Case was in Adrian, his wife, Mrs. Case, and children at home, she went across the road to H. R. Case's leaving three small children in the house. She had only got into the house when she saw the two oldest coming running after her saying "Ma, come and put some water on the fire!" Mrs. Case ran to the house and when she opened the door she saw the house full of smoke. Her first thought was her little girl, 16 months old, but she could not see her. Mr. Raven following Mrs. Case found the girl setting in a door and the flames of fire coming out over its head. With the assistance of one or two others the fire was put out, after doing considerable damage. About 3 o'clock in the afternoon, Mrs. Case says, she gathered up some papers that lay about the stove and put them in a rag box in a closet, at the same time sweeping off the stove hearth with the papers; it is thought that this is the way the fire caught, but it did not break out until 5 o'clock. It burned everything in the closet and picture cords holding pictures around the several rooms were burned off letting the pictures to the floor and smoking the plastering perfectly black The damage done to the house is estimated at about $70, covered by insurance; but there was no insurance on contents.

CLINTON.

The mental condition of Mrs. Geo. W. Lewis, not promising a change for the better, it was thought best to place her under thorough and immediate treatment at the Asylum at Pontiac. She was accordingly taken there last Thursday, accompanied by her husband and father.

At Cook & Co's sale of draught and carriage horses last Saturday, there seemed to be a lack of disposition on the part of bidders to run the prices up to where they could afford to sell, and consequently the sale was discontinued after only four had been knocked off. Some have since been sold at private sale.

A movement is on foot to either enlarge the seating capacity of the Town Hall, by building on in the rear for stage room, or to organize a Clinton Hall association and build a large and commodious public hall, one that will accommodate any crowd that may assemble, having ample stage room, scenery, etc. If the proper ones could have had their say when the present hall was built, it would have been nearer right.

C. W. Clough has leased the vacant lot on the Gibson corner, and will put up a building there this spring to be occupied as a printing office.

Frank Kirchgessner is making preparations to build a large grocery and provision store on Jackson street this spring, and pay cash for butter, eggs, etc., which will be a new departure for Clinton. Success to you.

Frank and Jacob Miller are filling their ice house to-day. The ice is about six inches in thickness and of very nice quality.

Yes, there may be a "land that is fairer than this," but heaven knows no other spot where so many have adopted the profession of "common setters" as right here in Clinton.

EAST TECUMSEH.

On Saturday evening, Feb. 7, a good program was presented at the East Tecumseh Literary Society, to a very full house. Arrangements were made and the East Raisin Literary Society invited to take part in a valentine party and oyster supper to be held at the residence of Minor Davidson, Friday evening, Feb. 13th. A cordial invitation is extended to all others.

On Saturday evening, Feb. 21, the following program will be presented:

Music—Miss Davidson.
Declamations—A. J. Hunter, Frank Benedict, Sam Boyce.
Select Readings—Emma Rogers, James Aten, Fred Goheen.
Music—Misses Rose Handershot, Rhoda Benedict.
Recitations—Minnie Brewster, Nellie Boyce, Eva Limbarker.
Music—Miss Hattie Freer.
Question—Resolved, That it would be for the interest of temperance for our next legislature to pass a prohibitory law.
To be discussed by the house.

RAISIN VALLEY.

Dr. Charles, of Indiana, a minister of note among Friends, was present at the last Quarterly meeting, and gave a highly interesting lecture Sabbath evening on the subject of "Tobacco." He also gave a temperance talk to the students on last Wednesday evening; Dr. Morden's lecture announced for that evening being postponed for one week.

The farm recently owned by Riley Payne has been sold to Geo. Westgate who will take possession the coming spring.

Thomas Chandler has been purchasing of Jacob Walton the fifty acres of land on the flats, thus enlarging his already fine farm.

Come to the valentine social at S. D. Poaths, on Friday evening of this week, and bring your valentines.

J. M. Cornelius, of Fruitport, Mich. and Mr. & Mrs. Daniel Haviland of Salem, O., have been visiting friends and relatives in this vicinity.

Last week closed the first half of the winter term at the Seminary.

Some new scholars expected this week. The new officers of the literary society are:

President—Tennie Kerr.
Vice Pres.—James Strong.
Sec.—Ed. Comfort.
Treas.—George Deline.
Marshal—H. Murbach.
Critic—Laura Strong.
Third member Ex. Com.—Lottie Simmons.

Mr. Stanley returned to Ohio last week, to be present while another coal shaft is being sunk on his farm there.

NEWBURG.

The scholars in the school at Newburg sometime ago organized a literary and debating society for the mutual improvement of the school. The society has grown to such proportions that some of the older ones out of the school have taken part in the exercises.

Last Friday evening the society held one of their most successful meetings. The exercises consisted of a variety of interesting literary productions and a debate on the question "Resolved that pride and ambition causes more misery than ignorance and superstition," which was debated with vigor on both sides but the affirmative won the victory.

As the society was organized for the advancement of the school the question arose whether or not outsiders should not be barred from taking part in the debate, but it was finally voted to let outsiders speak after the scholars had had their say. Tomorrow evening, the 13th, the program is as follows:

Music.
Rec.—Florence Hillman.
Essay—Mrs. C. M. Moore.
Rec.—Etta Stacy.
Essay—Miss Hattie McNeil.
Music.
Question, "Resolved—That the exodus of the colored people from the south is detrimental to the people.
Chief disputants. Aff.—W. W. Ward. Neg.—S. B. Goodrich.

BARNY GAD.

RIDGEWAY.

Remember the donation on the 19th.

Every body in this section has a cold to spare.

Our R. R. committee are still at work quietly.

About two hundred loaded teams per day is the estimate going by these corners to Tecumseh.

The Times correspondent intimates that our hair was not combed when we attended church last Sunday evening; Nature has saved him the trouble of combing any—Sour grapes.

The improvement in the roads has revived business among the farmers.

C. A. Sharp and wife are spending a few days in Ohio.

Material for the foundation of the christian church is being got on the ground.

A series of meetings has been in progress at the methodist church this week.

Chris Kumner met with a painful accident the other day. He had been to Adrian with a load, and on hitching up to come home he forgot to put the bits in the horses' mouths. All went well until he was descending a hill on the way home, when the horses became frightened and ran away, throwing him out and breaking a shoulder.

Jake Barrett felt sick; he always does; he thought to consult a cheap physician and so went to C. A. S. who, after feeling of Jakes tongue and looking at his pulse in orthodox style, perscribed a pint of whiskey, rhubarb, and Hive syrup, in equal parts. Jake sniffed, tasted, then drank the whole, and went home. In a couple of hours Jake's internal machinery began to hold a mass meeting, while Jake began to execute a series of gymnastics which greatly alarmed his folks, who thought him dying. Neighbors were called in among whom was a veterinary surgeon of great skill who administered the proper antidote and Jake was saved. And now he awaits the return of that aspirant of esculapian honors with blood in his eye.

Ridgeway Farmers' Club.

At the meeting of the Club Feb. 6, the house was well filled and a good program presented. The election of officers resulted as follow:

GLEANINGS FROM THE COUNTY PRESS.

Clinton is now agitating the project of building an addition to their Town Hall, to enlarge the audience room and make a commodious stage.

Justice Cooley of the Supreme Court has finally consented to hold the next term of the Lenawee County Court. The session will begin on Tuesday next, Feb. 17th.

Last Sunday afternoon, the "brick house farm," as it is called, in Palmyra, was visited by a disastrous fire, which destroyed the barns and contents on the farm. The origin of the fire is a mystery. The insurance on buildings and contents was about two thousand dollars.

Deerfield Record: Arrangements have been made by which W. F. Cowan, proprietor of the Deerfield hotel, has assumed control of Watson's tray manufactory. He intends to soon commence work in the factory, when he will run it steady every day. We are glad that the tray factory has got into the hands of one who will keep it humming.

Adrian Times: Henry White, a vagrant, goes to Ionia, by the sentence of Justice Lamb, for four months. He is suspected as the person who broke into the flagman's house at Dover turn-out, Friday night, and built a rousing fire, which, doubtless, would have burned the shanty had it not been for the timely arrival of the flagman.

Adrian Press: Mrs. Ingersoll accompanied her husband on the occasion of his lecture in this city on Monday evening. Coming from the depot in a hack, Mr. Ingersoll inquired of a member of the J. de V. club, "will the train be held till after the lecture?" "Yes," was the answer. Mrs. Ingersoll at once observed, "Then I suppose the railroad men in this section are all infidels."

Adrian Press: Last Monday evening, Mrs. Henry Hart received a paralytic stroke, affecting one of her feet, and a Detroit physician was summoned, and he expresses the opinion that she will never be able to walk upon it again. Her children from Detroit are in the city, and Mrs. Hart will soon go there for treatment. Her friends will learn of her misfortune with deep regret.

Hudson Gazette: As the line of the proposed Detroit & Butler R. R., as at present surveyed, runs considerably east of Adrian, it doesn't appear probable that the new road will run as far west as Medina after all—is more likely to strike Morenci it would seem. Detroit is determined to put this enterprise through and thus secure a direct communication with the Wabash system and the great Southwest.

Thomas Jefferson Ludlow, of Adrian, refuses to be suppressed. He pitches into "X," who had cast insinuations upon him and says: If he will mind his own business, and do his work well, it will occupy his whole time without damning the coroner. I have put up with these things as long as I propose to. I will, under the law, hold such inquests as I please during my term of office, and will not be intimidated by a cowardly scribbler.

Morenci Observer: Several of our live citizens, believing that the parties who are talking up the Detroit and Butler railway are in earnest and mean business, have taken the initial steps to secure the construction of the road to this village, as it is on an almost straight line between the termini of the proposed route. A report comes to us, and we give it for what it is worth, that work has already been commenced on the narrow guage road from Toledo to Morenci.

Morenci Observer: The re-election of Mr. G. B. Horton, of Fairfield, to the presidency of the Lenawee County Agricultural Society, for another year, will be regarded with much satisfaction by his many friends in the southern portion of the county. One of the strongest evidences of Mr. Horton's fitness for the position is evinced in the great success which the society had just within its grasp when the grand stand disaster occurred, for which he and other officials of the society were in no wise responsible.

Blissfield Advance: Through a mistake of the Bureau that advertises Mr. Burdette, he did not make his appearance Saturday. The lecture committee received word on Saturday morning that Burdette would not be here and immediately sent a dispatch to the Daily Times, and gave notice in other directions to that effect; but for all that, the people came from Tecumseh and other places and were much disappointed. The Bureau has given another date for Burdette. This time there will be no disappointment. This date as now fixed, is Feb. 26.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

ONLY A PIN.

Only a pin, yet it calmly lay
On the tiled floor in the light of day
And it shone serenely fair and bright,
Reflecting back the noonday light

Only a boy; yet he saw that pin,
And his face assumed a heathen grin
He stooped for awhile with look intent,
Till he and the pin alike were bent.

Only a chair but upon its seat
A well-dressed man, fearing safe retreat,
Nor had the keenest eye discerned
That boy and pin [illegible]

Only a man but he stamped to drop
Upon that chair, when [illegible]
He leaped like a jack from [illegible]
And opened his vocabulary thereafter

Only a yell though all heard some,
It lacked the element of life,
And joy and man, and pin and chair,
In wild confusion mingled there.

WHAT MRS. GRUNDY THOUGHT OF MY HOUSEKEEPING.

She didn't like it. I knew it, too, and was foolish enough to be very much put out about it. You see I had not been brought up to housekeeping, as there were five of us girls at home, plenty of help in the kitchen, and we grew and blossomed under the sunshine of a mother who was a host in herself, and who chose that we should live lives as free as the birds. Besides, she couldn't be bothered to train her wild brood into the decorous airs of housekeeping cares. She would rather have us out of the kitchen when there was anything to be done than in it; then, dear soul, she had such unbounded faith in the capacity of girls to turn out all right in the end—her girls, especially.

If we sometimes protested, and thought it desirable to take a few initiatory lessons of that mysterious divinity who presided over kitchen, bake-room and laundry, when, to be sure, was there ever a time? Certainly not when the best cake was to be made, which would be spoiled inevitably if too many fingers fussed with it. Not on Saturday, when rusk, and gingerbread, and cookies, and pies were all to be done at once. We were, too, utterly in the way in the hurry, and bustle, and confusion of a Saturday morning. Washing and ironing mornings we might have leave to set tables, wash dishes and help about the picked-up dinners: but was there ever a girl from ten to eighteen years that did not abominate dish-washing?

Sister Kate and I held long confabs, and talked wisely over this state of things as connected with our possible future, which usually resulted in a descent to the bake-room on Wednesday mornings, with an urgent appeal to be allowed to cook the roast and make the pastry for that day, at least; but the invariable answer would be: "Girls, it takes more experience and skill to make nice pie-crust than anything else. I can't have you dabbling. Your father wouldn't touch the pies when done, I fear. Besides, if you are mussing about, Bridget will be put out and leave. That would never do. You might have more than you bargain for in such a case."

"I wish she would, or father would get too poor to keep her, or—something," muttered Kate, half crying, with vexation.

"But, mother," said I, with some heat, "I should like to know how we are ever to learn if you don't let us try."

"There, there, puss! it will all come right in due time, when you have to come to it. Do enjoy your liberty while you can, dears."

Well, people say now—even Mrs. Grundy—that I am a good housekeeper; so the ability came at last, if not in time; but I had many a sharp lesson and good cry before I learned that which ought to have been learned in the nursery of my mother's kitchen.

When about to be married, mother schooled her patience enough to put me through a few lessons in bread and yeast-making, and I was told some very useful things in regard to cooking meats, pastry, confections, etc. I was allowed a hand also in my own wedding-cake, and to assist the laundress in fluting my elaborate skirts and night-dresses. But ironing made my head and back ache, and I hoped inwardly that housekeeping wasn't like that, or that "Charley" could afford me a housemaid.

Ours was a true love-match; and no mistake. What if friends had warned me that we were to be poor, and I should have my own work to do; and if provoking Mrs. Grundy had wondered "how Mrs. B—— could let one of her girls marry a mechanic, and come down in that style!" My parents had good sense, if they did worry a little about it; my father would give me an outfit and handsome dower. We loved each other, and were content. Just then I think we never heard

"The great wind blare!"

But I know that my mother felt then, and far more afterward, a bitter regret that she had not trained me to meet this emergency with fitness and skill.

I shall never forget my first day's experience in housekeeping. We had returned from our quiet little trip to the mountains, and, after resting at the old hearthstone for a few days, entered our own little nest of a home, full of eager anticipations of "playing keep house;" for so it seemed to us. We had previously sent out the wash accumulated since wedding day; and knowing that Charley's purse was nearing bottom, I determined on trying my skill at the ironing-board.

Well, when Charley had kindled a fire, brought wood and water, ordered the butcher, and baker, and groceryman to the house, he left me with a kiss for his work, and my duties before me. I meant to surprise him with a dozen shirts "done up" in the perfection of art—and such a dinner. Charley likes peas and mashed potatoes with a lamb roast; and, oh, capital! I'll make a Yorkshire pudding; that's simple enough; and how pleased he'll be! But first those shirts must be starched, I suppose," said I to myself, not without a secret misgiving.

The starch didn't work well; somehow I couldn't manage it. "I guess they'll do better to lie awhile."

So saying, I seated myself to shell the basket of peas. But the morning was hot, and there seemed no bottom to the basket. They were finished, however, at last, and the roast skewered and in the oven.

"Now for those shirts. Why didn't I ever do pa's at home? My, how the starch sticks! What can I do?" And over the very first one I blistered my hand, lost my temper, and sat down in despair.

"I'll wash that starch out and try cold," said I, with tears of vexation; and at it I went in good earnest. But it was of no use. Such a sight as those bosoms were!—fit only for the wash-tub.

"The dinner mustn't fail, anyhow," said I, preparing my pudding, and setting it under the drip of the roast. So, bathing my heated, flushed face, I consoled myself with the arrangements of my table, peeping here and there into dear little, mysterious cupboards, till I entirely forgot to baste the roast, and was only brought back to sad realities by the smell of burning vegetables and smoke issuing from the oven door. The kettles had boiled dry, my delicate leg of mutton was burnt crisp, and as soda had been forgotten in my pudding, it merely presented a shriveled face.

This was too much, and when Charley came bounding into the dining-room he found me all in a heap on the floor, crying like a child. I think he took in the situation at a glance, but was too generous to laugh, only exclaiming: "What is the matter, Susie?"

"Matter enough, Charley. The dinner is spoilt, and so are the shirts. I can't do anything. Don't let us keep house another day. I can never, never do it," said I, with a fresh burst of tears.

"Don't let us break up till after dinner, pet."

"But I tell you I can't get any dinner; I don't know how," I replied, savagely.

"There, there, child! you are tired and worried. I will help, and we will have a nice dinner in an hour. I have cooked many a dinner for my mother."

"You, Charley!" said I, brightening under his patient good nature.

"Yes, dear. Mother liked to have us boys learn how. She used to say, 'It will come in play sometime;' and I guess she was right."

"Dear me! I wish mother would have taught me, not only to cook dinners, but how to do everything. No girl has any right to be married till she has been trained for housekeeping," said I, with a sigh, and very sententiously.

"You are not going to be sorry that you are married, Susie?"

"I don't know; perhaps," I replied, a little maliciously. "Certainly, if it is all going to be like this morning."

"It won't be, dear. I will help you, and you will learn famously, I am sure."

Charley said no more at that time, but at night, over our simple tea, gave me a few valuable hints, such as attempting only the simplest dishes at first, and not too much work at once.

I tried hard to battle with difficulties; but as the days wore on, and heavy buckwheats, muddy coffee, soggy vegetables and dried-up meats were the general rule, Charley looked grave, and I grew careless, desperate and disheartened. An ill-visaged ogre, in the shape of a comfortless-kept house, stood at the door of our home, threatening conjugal happiness with utter wreck. It was just then that Mrs. Grundy added fuel to the flames by criticising me sharply—mercilessly. "How could Mrs. B—— bring up a daughter to be such a wretched housekeeper! What a pity that 'Charley' should have been so unfortunate!"

This last fired me. It was all very well to affirm that "it is none of Mrs. Grundy's business how I keep house;" or that "she is a meddlesome old creature, who had better keep her prying eyes at home!" I did care, and felt her criticisms in every fibre of my sensitive being, and mentally resolved to get ahead of her.

"Where there's a will, there's a way," I ejaculated. "I'll coax Charley to shut up the house, and go to mother's to board, while I go and make a six weeks' visit to Aunt Jane, in the old farm house among the Vermont Hills. She'll be willing to have me 'in the way' long enough to learn how to keep house, I know."

It did not take long to consummate my arrangements, for I was in earnest, you may be sure, and startled my good old auntie into dropping a tin of warm bread, by bounding into her kitchen one bright October morning, exclaiming: "Auntie, I am in dreadful trouble; will you help me?"

"Help you, child? Of course I will. But what's the trouble? I thought you and Charley were just the happiest couple in the land, and keeping house to your heart's content. I was going to drop down on you this fall."

"I'm so glad you didn't, auntie; Charley never would have gotten over the mortification of having you see my wretched housekeeping. You see, mother never taught us," said I, breaking down at the recollection of all my troubles, and sinking into the nearest chair. "But everybody—that is, Mrs. Grundy, thinks I ought to know by intuition, or somehow; and the fact is, I hoped away off here, where everything is done so quietly, and there is always plenty of time, that I could learn."

"Poor child!" murmured good Aunt Jane, as she stroked my hair, and buried my burning face against her motherly breast, "poor child, you have trod a tough experience, but we'll soon institute a new order of things."

"You'd better say 'poor Charley,'" I replied, with some bitterness; "I don't believe he will care to see me back very soon, auntie."

"Tut, tut, child! don't be naughty. Just make up your mind to be a first-class housekeeper, and retrieve your reputation. The real stuff is in you, Susie—only wants bringing to the surface. It was a sad mistake, not to have learned before, but it is never too late to mend. Charley will be perfectly happy, when you become able to keep his home properly. We are such creatures of sense, dear, that we cannot ignore the physical, even though heavenly charms surround us. You are tired out with this new strain and have been unequal to the contest. Rest to-day, and to-morrow we will commence in real earnest."

And so we did. Such a training as Aunt Jane put me through! From garret to cellar, from parlor to cook-room; laundry, closet and pantry, I worked with a good will and a purpose. Charley was to be pleased, and Mrs. Grundy confounded. I learned how to handle broom, duster and mop. To polish furniture, silver and glass. To sort linen and iron starched clothes! (The starch didn't stick, either.) To prepare wholesome and nourishing food for the sick, such as broths and gruels, and concoct delicate viands and conserves. To cook birthday and Thanksgiving dinners. To make the most of odds and ends of provisions, and get a meal out of an empty larder. To put on a patch, and darn a sock; and at last, to give those minute finishing touches of light and shade, color, and bloom, and artistic arrangement, which will make the plainest home beautiful.

Aunt Jane gave me my diploma, and I went home. I was tired—worn out. But what of that? I had conquered, and how pleased Charley would be! That was my one thought. My head ached and whirled when my husband met me at the depot.

"I believe that I am sick," I said, in response to his eager greeting, and sank unconscious into his arms; remembering no more for weeks, but rallying at last, to find anxious friends at my couch, a "Bridget" in the kitchen, and to be told that I had been very ill of brain fever, and had raved constantly of work, housekeeping, Mrs. Grundy and "poor Charley."

"What a strain you have had, dear Sue," said my husband. (I think they never knew how great.)

Well, when health and strength came back, Bridget was dismissed, and then came my triumph. Everybody stimulated, cheered and admired my success. Mother said: "I told you my Sue would come out all right!"—but I knew she had wept over my failures. But nobody's praise was one-half so sweet as Charley's happy, satisfied face. There were no more skeletons, or ogres, on the threshold, or in the back-room of our house—for awhile, I should have said—for by and by, I grew so weary of it all. There was no time for books or music through the day, and at night I was too tired; and that old Mrs. Grundy began to meddle again.

"What a pity that Susie Blair should devote all her energies to mere household drudgery. Her husband will leave her far behind in culture and polish. Poor man! I pity him."

Then indeed, I was miserable. That we had a perfectly ordered house, spotless linen, silver and glass—no longer muddy coffee, but clear as amber, and steak and muffins done to a turn, was no comfort, or but poor. Just at this juncture we received a visit from Aunt Jane.

"Susie," said she, after she had been on a tour of inspection about the house, "you have a natural gift at housekeeping. How beautifully everything is done. But my dear, you look pale and careworn, and not a bit like the Susie of old. What is it, child? The work for two should not wear you like this. Is there not such a thing as being too particular?"

"I don't know, auntie, I'm sure," I answered, with a sigh. "When I was careless, Mrs. Grundy's contempt knew no bounds; now she calls me over nice, and says that I have descended into a mere household drudge. What am I to do?"

"My dear Susie, there is a happy medium, which you must find, by all means. Let all things be done decently and in order, is a Bible maxim, but you are in danger of becoming altogether absorbed in toil, to the neglect of your health and happiness. It is not all of life to live, child. Learn the true philosophy of life, and live above Mrs. Grundy's clatter. She will cease to choose you for a mark, when she finds her venomed tongue has no power to annoy."

Aunt Jane's visit proved a benison. Her lesson was well pondered and taken to heart. But it took some time to get out of the rut which I had so earnestly striven to reach. At last, however, I did find that I could be a good housekeeper, and have leisure for my books, piano, an occasional lecture and concert, and not be too weary to converse with my husband at night, either.

Then were we truly happy. I forgot all about Mrs. Grundy's clatter, when Charley would say: "Susie, I am sure that there is not another home in the world like ours!" And then again I am certain

"We never heard the great wind blare!"

DISCOURAGED.

"I'm hungry and ragged and half sick and dead-broke," muttered a tramp as he sat down for a sun-bath on a wharf at Detroit, "but it's just my luck. Last fall I got into Detroit just two hours too late to sell my vote. Nobody to blame. Found a big wallet on the street in December and four police came up before I could hide it. Luck again. Got knocked down by a street car, but there was no opening for a suit and damages because I was drunk. Just the way. Last fall nails were way down. I knew there'd be a rise but I didn't buy and hold for an advance. Lost $10,000 out and out. Allus that way with me. Glass went up 25 per cent., but I had't a pane on hand excepting the pain in my back. Never knew it to fail. Now lumber's gone up, and I don't even own a fence-picket to reelize on. Just me again. Fell into the river t'other day, but instead of pulling me out and giving me a hot whiskey they pulled me out and told me to leave town or I'd get the bounce. That's me again. Now I've got settted down here for a bit of a rest and a snooze, but I'll be routed out in less than fifteen minutes, and I know it. It'll be just my behanged luck!" He settled down, slid his hat over his face and was just beginning to feel sleepy when a hundred pounds of coal rattled down on him. "I knew it—I knew it!" shouted the tramp as he sprang up and rubbed the dust off his head; "I said so all the time, and I just wish the durned old hogshead had come down along with the coal and jammed me through the wharf."

SMALL CHANGE IN THE WEST.

A Kansas correspondent of the Boston Transcript writes:

In truth, a person who waits for change in the shape of two, three or four cents is looked upon with something of scorn in the West. Is your bill seventy-eight cents? You pay eighty, or the obliging shopkeeper says: "Call it seventy-five."

I recalled an incident which one of the merchants of Salina related when speaking of his recent trip to New York for goods. After making his preparations for returning he went to settle his bill, which proved to be $40 03. He paid $40, and was turning away when he was recalled by a tap on the shoulder, and the three cents were pointed out.

In scornful amazement he threw down ten cents, and again started away.

"Here is your change, sir," said a voice, in no wise overwhelmed by his contempt.

The merchant waved his hand and bowed.

"Keep it, sir. I am a western man. We don't grasp three or four cents there so closely."

Laura (with novel)—"Oh, if this tale were only true and I were the heroine!" Kate—"What! with her persecutions, her misery?" Laura—"Ah, but then, dear, remember she does get a husband, after all."

In the great game of life hearts and diamonds seem to be trumps, but by and by old Death will lead his little joker and knock us out of time. Then we shall have to follow suit and spades will be trumps.

When a man is out of money, any change that may come to him is for the better.

YOU SHOULD TAKE IT.

In Point of Excellence It is Unsurpassed, and Every Family Will Appreciate it and Enjoy Its Perusal.

Every man should make his home as comfortable and attractive as possible.

A most essential requisite to that end is a good newspaper. The perusal of such a newspaper not only instills in the rising generation a love of home but is a constant incentive to improvement. Simply as an educator, and aside from all other considerations, no parent should forego taking into his family THE DETROIT FREE PRESS.

For the year 1880 we have to offer the standard features which have made THE FREE PRESS the most popular journal in the world, and with such additions as will prove of special interest to Michigan readers.

Addressing more particularly the farmer, we take extreme pains to procure complete and accurate market reports. They embrace farm products of every character, including live stock. The quotations, corrected to the day of publication, front all the leading cities, as well as those of Detroit, are given each week.

A carefully organized system of regular correspondence throughout Michigan will give the readers early and complete intelligence of all happenings in the State.

At this point we wish to remind readers that the best and fullest reports as well as the earliest news of all important affairs, whether happening in Michigan or elsewhere, will be found in THE FREE PRESS. We might refer to the two most recent and terrible disasters in Michigan—the Adrian grand stand horror and the Jackson railroad accident—as examples, reinforced on frequent occasions by accounts of great public events which THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS has laid before its readers in advance of its contemporaries.

No newspaper has brighter or more intelligent editorial comments on the leading topics of the day.

None surpass it in candor; none equal it in literary merit; none approach it in spice, sparkle and vivacity.

Its correspondence by its superior excellence, has attracted great attention, and in this especial department The Free Press is acknowledged to stand at the very front.

Readers of The Free Press will receive through its columns an intelligible idea of new books of merit as they are from time to time published. Liberal extracts and discriminating reviews appear every week.

Attention is given to historical topics, and articles having special reference to our own State are in preparation.

"THE HOUSEHOLD."

Every issue of THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS is accompanied by "The Household," a supplement devoted to social and domestic topics, flower culture, fancy work, toilet and cooking recipes and household matters generally. It is furnished without extra charge, and every purchaser or subscriber to The Weekly Free Press is entitled to receive a copy.

To sum up, all must conclude that The Weekly Free Press and The Household—a supplement which accompanies every issue—though furnished together for $1.50 a year, compare in the amount and excellence of contents with the best of the four dollar magazines.

The Weekly Free Press and "The Household" together are furnished at $1.50 a year.

Liberal premiums, embracing yearly subscriptions to the various magazines, etc., are given for clubs. Address letters to

What a dream of home comfort it is to hear the happy tea-kettle singing "In the sweet boil and boil."

The proper way to check slander is to despise it; attempt to overtake and refute it, and it will outrun you.

No grander thing can a man do than to give a helping hand to a young man who has become discouraged.

Brigham Young left forty-two widows to remember him, and yet he is as destitute of a monument as is George Washington.

Kind words cost but little. It's the orders your wife gives at the dry goods stores that throws the cash account all askew.

Wife—"But, my dear, I shall catch cold coming down so late to let you in." Husband—"Oh, no, my love; I will rap you up well before you come down."

Gold from Europe continues to arrive here in such quantities that our young men can now have two sets of brass sleeve buttons without being considered extravagant.

This is the season when the draft which comes in through an open door makes many a man shudder. Particularly if it is a sight draft and is bro't in by a bank collector.

When a very respectable man is discovered committing a crime the proper thing for him to do is to ask the public to suspend public opinion until the thing is forgotton.

John says his mother makes a great cry if his sister goes out without her shade-hat. She don't want her to get freckled; but she doesn't seem to care a bit how much his father tans him.

Alphonso and Christina haven't quarreled yet, but the young queen is reported to have got her Dutch up when Alf stated that, he didn't want his palace reeking with the fumes of sauer-kraut.

A man had a very wicked parrot, who swore terrible oaths. To cure the parrot of such a bad habit it was plunged in cold water every time he used language of the kind. One rainy day the parrot happened to see some dripping wet chickens go by his cage, and so he called out: "You miserable fools; been swearing, have you?"

Montreal Heard From.

R. L. Mosely; of Montreal, Canada, certified Sept. 27, 1879, that he had suffered terribly from dyspepsia, and was completely cured by taking Warner's Safe Bitters. He says: "My appetite is good, and I suffer no inconvenience from eating hearty meals." These Bitters are also a specific for all skin diseases.

Feels Young Again.

"My mother was afflicted a long time with Neuralgia, and a dull, heavy, inactive condition of the whole system, headache, nervous prostration, and was almost helpless. No physicians or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters, with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over 70 years old.—We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family."—A lady, Providence, R. I.

LEAP YEAR DIFFICULTIES.

He was a nice young man, with cane, high hat and patent-leather boots. He strolled leisurely down Fourth avenue, puffing daintily upon a cigarette, and occasionally twirling the waxed ends of his moustache. He was accosted by a stout woman with a florid complexion.

"Top of the mornin' to ye, Mister Charley," said she.

"Good morning, Mrs. McGninness," said the nice young man.

"Me darlint boy, would ye ——" and she bestowed a bewitching smile upon him. He dodged out of her reach. The collection box. It was Leap Year rushed upon him. He answered:

"Madame — really — I, can I — I am very sorry if I cause you pain—but my affections have already been bestowed upon another—and, madame—I can't—I can't marry you."

She gazed at him in astonishment, and then said, indignantly: "Who axed ye to marry me? The idea of the likes of me, a poor, lone widdy, wid four children to support by washin' axin' ye to marry me. I was only goin' to ax ye for ninty dollars for washin'."

He sighed and gave her a dollar, and walked sadly away.

A Wonderful Discovery.

For the speedy cure of Consumption and all diseases that lead to it, such as stubborn Coughs, neglected Colds, Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Asthma, pain in the side and chest, dry hacking cough, tickling in the throat, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, and all chronic or lingering diseases of the throat and lungs. Dr. King's New Discovery has no equal and has established for itself a world-wide reputation. Many leading physicians recommend and use it in their practice. The formula from which it is prepared is highly recommended by all medical journals. The clergy and the press have complimented it in the most glowing terms. Go to your druggist and get a trial bottle free of cost, or regular size for $1.00. For sale by M. Wright & Son, Tecumseh, Mich.

NOW SAVE THE RAGS.

The most noticeable, perhaps, of all the advances during the last "boom" has been in the price of rags which have more than doubled in value, and are now worth three cents and a half per pound. At this price, and even at much less, it will pay to save them and sell them. The same is true of old paper of nearly every kind, as by cleansing they are reconverted into white paper by the manufacturers.

In consequence of the scarcity of rags and old paper, the price of 'print' or paper for news purposes, has gone up from six and a half to ten cents at wholesale. If this price keeps up, there will be a general rise in the subscription price, as has indeed in many instances already occurred.

Almost any family can make enough in a year by selling rags and old paper to pay for all their reading matter.

Poverty and Suffering.

"I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did them no good.—I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well and none of us have seen a sick day since, and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost—I know it.

A Rochester Physician's Experience.

R. Calkins, M. D., of Rochester, N. He says: "I would now prescribe the same remedy to all similarly afflicted, and you are at liberty to so state in your testimonials."

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

ONLY A PIN.

Only a pin, yet it calmly lay
On the tuffed floor in the light of day;
And it shone serenely fair and bright,
Reflecting back the noonday light.

Only a boy; yet he saw that pin,
And his face assumed a fiendish grin.
He stooped for awhile with look intent,
Till he and the pin alike were bent.

Only a chair; but upon its seat
A well-bent pin found safe retreat.
Nor did the keenest eye discerned
That heaven-wed life-point was turned.

Only a chair; but he chanced to drop
Upon that chair, where he—hem—popped
[illegible] a sance in a [illegible] board,
And spread his raiment in twain.

Only a yell; though an hoarse one
It lacked the element of fun;
And boy and man, and pin and chair
In wild confusion mingled there.

WHAT MRS. GRUNDY THOUGHT OF MY HOUSEKEEPING.

She didn't like it. I knew it, too, and was foolish enough to be very much put out about it. You see I had not been brought up to housekeeping, as there were five of us girls at home, plenty of help in the kitchen, and we grew and blossomed under the sunshine of a mother who was a host in herself, and who chose that we should live lives as free as the birds. Besides, she couldn't be bothered to train her wild brood into the decorous airs of housekeeping cares. She would rather have us out of the kitchen when there was anything to be done than in it; then, dear soul, she had such unbounded faith in the capacity of girls to turn out all right in the end—her girls, especially.

If we sometimes protested, and thought it desirable to take a few initiatory lessons of that mysterious divinity who presided over kitchen, bake-room and laundry, when, to be sure, was there ever a time? Certainly not when the best cake was to be made, which would be spoiled inevitably if too many fingers fussed with it. Not on Saturday, when rusk, and gingerbread, and cookies, and pies were all to be done at once. We were, too, utterly in the way in the hurry, and bustle, and confusion of a Saturday morning. Washing and ironing mornings we might have leave to set tables, wash dishes and help about the picked-up dinners; but was there ever a girl from ten to eighteen years that did not abominate dish-washing?

Sister Kate and I held long confabs, and talked wisely over this state of things as connected with our possible future, which usually resulted in a descent to the bake-room on Wednesday mornings, with an urgent appeal to be allowed to cook the roast and make the pastry for that day, at least; but the invariable answer would be: "Girls, it takes more experience and skill to make nice pie-crust than anything else. I can't have you dabbling. Your father wouldn't touch the pies when done, I fear. Besides, if you are mussing about, Bridget will be put out and leave. That would never do. You might have more than your bargain for in such a case!"

"I wish she would, or father would get too poor to keep her, or—something," muttered Kate, half crying with vexation.

"But, mother," said I, with some heat, "I should like to know how we are ever to learn if you don't let us try."

"There, there, puss! it will all come right in due time, when you have to come to it. Do enjoy your liberty while you can, dears."

Well, people say now—even Mrs. Grundy—that I am a good housekeeper; so the ability came at last, if not in time; but I had many a sharp lesson and good cry before I learned that which ought to have been learned in the nursery of my mother's kitchen.

When about to be married, mother schooled her patience enough to put me through a few lessons in bread and yeast-making, and I was told some very useful things in regard to cooking meats, pastry, confections, etc. I was allowed a hand also in my own wedding-cake, and to assist the laundress in fluting my elaborate skirts and night-dresses. But ironing made my head and back ache, and I hoped inwardly that housekeeping wasn't like that, or that "Charley" could afford me a housemaid.

Ours was a true love-match; and no mistake. What if friends had warned me that we were to be poor, and I should have my own work to do; and if provoking Mrs. Grundy had wondered "how Mrs. B—— could let one of her girls marry a mechanic, and come down in that style!" My parents had good sense, if they did worry a little about it; my father would give me an outfit and handsome dower. We loved each other, and were content. Just then I think we never heard

But I know that my mother felt then, and far more afterward, a bitter regret that she had not trained me to meet this emergency with fitness and skill.

I shall never forget my first day's experience in housekeeping. We had returned from our quiet little trip to the mountains, and, after resting at the old hearthstone for a few days, entered our own little nest of a home, full of eager anticipations of "playing keep house;" for so it seemed to us. We had previously sent out the wash accumulated since wedding day; and knowing that Charley's purse was nearing bottom, I determined on trying my skill at the ironing-board.

Well, when Charley had kindled a fire, brought wood and water, ordered the butcher, and baker, and grocery-man to the house, he left me with a kiss for his work, and my duties began. I meant to surprise him with a dozen shirts "done up" in the perfection of art—and such a dinner, "Charley like pets" and mashed potatoes with a lamb roast; and, oh, capital! I'll make a Yorkshire pudding; that's simple enough; and how pleased he'll be! But first those shirts must be starched, I suppose," said I to myself, not without a secret misgiving.

The starch didn't work well; somehow I couldn't manage it. "I guess they'll do better to lie awhile."

So saying, I seated myself to shell the basket of peas. But the morning was hot, and there seemed no bottom to the basket. They were finished, however, at last, and the roast skewered and in the oven.

"Now for those shirts. Why didn't I ever do pa's at home? My, how the starch sticks! What can I do?" And over the very first one I blistered my hand, lost my temper, and sat down in despair.

"I'll wash that starch out and try cold," said I, with tears of vexation; and at it I went in good earnest. But it was of no use. Such a sight as those bosoms were!—fit only for the wash-tub.

"The dinner mustn't fail, anyhow," said I, preparing my pudding, and setting it under the drip of the roast. So, bathing my heated, flushed face, I consoled myself with the arrangements of my table, peeping here and there into dear little, mysterious cupboards, till I entirely forgot to baste the roast, and was only brought back to sad realities by the smell of burning vegetables and smoke issuing from the oven door. The kettles had boiled dry, my delicate leg of mutton was burnt crisp, and as soda had been forgotten in my pudding, it merely presented a shriveled face.

This was too much, and when Charley came bounding into the dining-room he found me all in a heap on the floor, crying like a child. I think he took in the situation at a glance, but was too generous to laugh, only exclaiming: "What is the matter, Susie?"

"Matter enough, Charley. The dinner is spoilt, and so are the shirts. I can't do anything. Don't let us keep house another day. I can never, never do it," said I, with a fresh burst of tears.

"Don't let us break up till after dinner, pet."

"But I tell you I can't get any dinner; I don't know how," I replied, savagely.

"There, there, child! you are tired and worried. I will help, and we will have a nice dinner in an hour. I have cooked many a dinner for my mother."

"You, Charley!" said I, brightening under his patient good nature.

"Yes, dear. Mother liked to have us boys learn how. She used to say, 'It will come in play sometime;' and I guess she was right."

"Dear me! I wish mother would have taught me, not only to cook dinners, but how to do everything. No girl has any right to be married till she has been trained for housekeeping," said I, with a sigh, and very sententiously.

"You are not going to be sorry that you are married, Susie?"

"I don't know; perhaps," I replied, a little maliciously. "Certainly, if it is all going to be like this morning."

"It won't be, dear. I will help you, and you will learn famously, I am sure."

Charley said no more at that time, but at night, over our simple tea, gave me a few valuable hints, such as attempting only the simplest dishes at first, and not too much work at once.

I tried hard to battle with difficulties; but as the days wore on, and heavy buckwheats, muddy coffee, soggy vegetables and dried-up meats were the general rule, Charley looked grave, and I grew careless, desperate and disheartened. An ill-visaged ogre, in the shape of a comfortless-kept house, stood at the door of our home, threatening conjugal happiness with utter wreck. It was just then that Mrs. Grundy added fuel to the flames by criticising me sharply—mercilessly. "How could Mrs. B—— bring up a daughter to be such a wretched housekeeper! What a pity that 'Charley' should have been so unfortunate!"

This last fired me. It was all very well to affirm that "it is none of Mrs. Grundy's business how I keep house;" or that "she is a meddlesome old creature, who had better keep her prying eyes at home!" I did care, and felt her criticisms in every fibre of my sensitive being, and mentally resolved to get ahead of her.

"Where there's a will, there's a way," I ejaculated. "I'll coax Charley to shut up the house, and go to mother's to board, while I go and make a six weeks' visit to Aunt Jane, in the old farm house among the Vermont Hills. She'll be willing to have me 'in the way' long enough to learn how to keep house, I know."

It did not take long to consummate my arrangements, for I was in earnest, you may be sure, and startled my good old auntie into dropping a tin of warm bread, by bounding into her kitchen one bright October morning, exclaiming: "Auntie, I am in dreadful trouble; will you help me?"

"Help you, child? Of course I will. But what's the trouble? I thought you and Charley were just the happiest couple in the land, and keeping house to your heart's content. I was going to drop down on you this fall."

"I'm so glad you didn't, auntie; Charley never would have gotten over the mortification of having you see my wretched housekeeping. You see, mother never taught us," said I, breaking down at the recollection of all my troubles, and sinking into the nearest chair. "But everybody—that is, Mrs. Grundy, thinks I ought to know by intuition, or somehow; and the fact is, I hoped away off here, where everything is done so quietly, and there is always plenty of time, that I could learn."

"Poor child!" murmured good Aunt Jane, as she stroked my hair, and buried my burning face against her motherly breast, "poor child, you have trod a tough experience, but we'll soon institute a new order of things."

"You'd better say 'poor Charley,'" I replied, with some bitterness; "I don't believe he will care to see me back very soon, auntie."

"Tut, tut, child! don't be naughty. Just make up your mind to be a first-class housekeeper, and retrieve your reputation. The real stuff is in you, Susie—only waits bringing to the surface. It was a sad mistake, not to have learned before, but it is never to late to mend. Charley will be perfectly happy, when you become able to keep his home properly. We are such creatures of sense, dear, that we cannot ignore the physical, even though heavenly charms surround us. You are tired out with this new strain and have been unequal to the contest. Rest to-day, and to-morrow we will commence in real earnest."

And so we did. Such a training as Aunt Jane put me through! From garret to cellar, from parlor to cook-room; laundry, closet and pantry. I worked with a good will and a purpose. Charley was to be pleased, and Mrs. Grundy confounded. I learned how to handle broom, duster and mop. To polish furniture, silver and glass. To sort linen and iron starched clothes! (The starch didn't stick, either.) To prepare wholesome and nourishing food for the sick, such as broths and gruels, and concoct delicate viands and conserves. To cook birthday and Thanksgiving dinners. To make the most of odds and ends of provisions, and get a meal out of an empty larder. To put on a patch, and darn a sock; and at last, to give those minute finishing touches of light and shade, color, and bloom, and artistic arrangement, which will make the plainest home beautiful.

Aunt Jane gave me my diploma, and I went home. I was tired—worn out. But what of that? I had conquered, and how pleased Charley would be! That was my one thought. My head ached and whirled when my husband met me at the depot.

"I believe that I am sick," I said, in response to his eager greeting, and sank unconscious into his arms; remembering no more for weeks, but rallying at last, to find anxious friends at my couch, a "Bridget" in the kitchen, and to be told that I had been very ill of brain fever, and had raved constantly of work, housekeeping, Mrs. Grundy and "poor Charley."

"What a strain you have had, dear Sue," said my husband. (I think they never knew how great.)

Well, when health and strength came back, Bridget was dismissed, and then came my triumph. Everybody stimulated, cheered and admired my success. Mother said: "I told you my Sue would come out all right!"—but I knew she had wept over my failures. But nobody's praise was one-half so sweet as Charley's happy, satisfied face. There were no more skeletons, or ogres, on the threshold, or in the back-room of our house—for awhile, I should have said—for by and by, I grew so weary of it all. There was no time for books or music through the day, and at night I was too tired; and that old Mrs. Grundy began to meddle again.

"What a pity that Susie Blair should devote all her energies to mere household drudgery. Her husband will leave her far behind in culture and polish. Poor man! I pity him."

Then indeed, I was miserable. That we had a perfectly ordered house, spotless linen, silver and glass—no longer muddy coffee, but clear as amber, and steak and muffins done to a turn, was no comfort, or but poor. Just at this juncture we received a visit from Aunt Jane.

"Susie," said she, after she had been on a tour of inspection about the house, "you have a natural gift at housekeeping. How beautifully everything is done. But my dear, you look pale and careworn, and not a bit like the Susie of old. What is it, child? The work for two should not wear you like this. Is there not such a thing as being too particular?"

"I don't know, auntie, I'm sure," I answered, with a sigh. "When I was careless, Mrs. Grundy's contempt knew no bounds; now she calls me overnice, and says that I have descended into a 'mere household drudge.' What am I to do?"

"My dear Susie, there is a happy medium, which you must find, by all means. Let all things be done decently and in order, is a Bible maxim, but you are in danger of becoming altogether absorbed in toil, to the neglect of your health and happiness. It is not all of life to live, child. Learn the true philosophy of life, and live above Mrs. Grundy's clatter. She will cease to choose you for a mark, when she finds her venomed tongue has no power to annoy."

Aunt Jane's visit proved a benison. Her lesson was well pondered and taken to heart. But it took some time to get out of the rut which I had so earnestly striven to reach. At last, however, I did find that I could be a good housekeeper, and have leisure for my books, piano, an occasional lecture and concert, and not be too weary to converse with my husband at night, either.

Then were we truly happy. I forgot all about Mrs. Grundy's clatter, when Charley would say: "Susie, I am sure that there is not another home in the world like ours!" And then again I am certain

"We never heard the great wind blare!"

DISCOURAGED.

"I'm hungry and ragged and half sick and dead-broke," muttered a tramp as he sat down for a sun-bath on a wharf at Detroit, "but it's just my luck. Last fall I got into Detroit just two hours too late to sell my vote. Nobody to blame. Found a big wallet on the street in December and four police came up before I could hide it. Luck again. Got knocked down by a street car, but there was no opening for a suit and damages because I was drunk. Just the way. Last fall nails were way down. I knew there'd be a rise but I didn't buy and hold for an advance. Lost $10,000 out and out. Allus that way with me. Glass went up 25 per cent., but I had't a pane on hand excepting the pain in my back. Never knew it to fail. Now lumber's gone up, and I don't even own a fence-picket to realize on. Just me again. Fell into the river t'other day, but instead of pulling me out and giving me a hot whiskey they pulled me out and told me to leave town or I'd get the bounce. That's me again. Now I've got settled down here for a bit of a rest and a snooze, but I'll be routed out in less than fifteen minutes, and I know it. It'll be just my belunged luck!" He settled down, slid his hat over his face and was just beginning to feel sleepy when a hundred pounds of coal rattled down on him. "I knew it—I knew it!" shouted the tramp as he sprang up and rubbed the dust off his head; "I said so all the time, and I just wish the durned old hogshead had come down along with the coal and jammed me through the wharf."

SMALL CHANGE IN THE WEST.

A Kansas correspondent of the Boston Transcript writes:

In truth, a person who waits for change in the shape of two, three or four cents is looked upon with something of scorn in the West. Is your bill seventy-eight cents? You pay eighty, or the obliging shopkeeper says: "Call it seventy-five."

I recalled an incident which one of the merchants of Salina related when speaking of his recent trip to New York for goods. After making his preparations for returning he went to settle his bill, which proved to be $40 03. He paid $40, and was turning away when he was recalled by a tap on the shoulder, and the three cents were pointed out.

In scornful amazement he threw down ten cents, and again started away.

"Here is your change, sir," said a voice, in no wise overwhelmed by his contempt.

The merchant waved his hand and bowed.

"Keep it, sir. I am a western man. We don't grasp three or four cents there so closely."

Laura (with novel)—"Oh, if this tale were only true and I were the heroine!" Kate—"What! with her persecutions, her miseries?" Laura—"Ah, but then, dear, remember she does get a husband, after all."

In the great game of life hearts and diamonds seem to be trumps, but by and by old Death will lead his little joker and knock us out of time. Then we shall have to follow suit and spades will be trumps.

When a man is out of money, any change that may come to him is for the better.

YOU SHOULD TAKE IT.

In Point of Excellence It is Unsurpassed, and Every Family Will Appreciate it and Enjoy Its Perusal.

Every man should make his home as comfortable and attractive as possible.

A most essential requisite to that end is a good newspaper. The perusal of such a newspaper not only instills in the rising generation a love of home but is a constant incentive to improvement. Simply as an educator, and aside from all other considerations, no parent should forego taking into his family THE DETROIT FREE PRESS.

For the year 1880 we have to offer the standard features which have made THE FREE PRESS the most popular journal in the world, and with such additions as will prove of special interest to Michigan readers.

Addressing more particularly the farmer, we take extreme pains to procure complete and accurate market reports. They embrace farm products of every character, including live stock. The quotations, corrected to the day of publication, from all the leading cities, as well as those of Detroit, are given each week.

A carefully organized system of regular correspondence throughout Michigan will give the readers early and complete intelligence of all happenings in the State.

At this point we wish to remind readers that the best and fullest reports as well as the earliest news of all important affairs, whether happening in Michigan or elsewhere, will be found in THE FREE PRESS. We might refer to the two most recent and terrible disasters in Michigan—the Adrian grand stand horror and the Jackson railroad accident—as examples, reinforced on frequent occasions by accounts of great public events which THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS has laid before its readers in advance of its contemporaries.

No newspaper has brighter or more intelligent editorial comments on the leading topics of the day.

None surpass it in candor; none equal it in literary merit; none approach it in spice, sparkle and vivacity.

Its correspondence by its superior excellence, has attracted great attention, and in this especial department The Free Press is acknowledged to stand at the very front.

Readers of The Free Press will receive through its columns an intelligible idea of new books of merit as they are from time to time published. Liberal extracts and discriminating reviews appear every week.

Attention is given to historical topics, and articles having special reference to our own State are in preparation.

"THE HOUSEHOLD."

Every issue of THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS is accompanied by "The Household," a supplement devoted to social and domestic topics, flower culture, fancy work, toilet and cooking recipes and household matters generally. It is furnished without extra charge, and every purchaser or subscriber to The Weekly Free Press is entitled to receive a copy.

To sum up, all must conclude that The Weekly Free Press and The Household—a supplement which accompanies every issue—though furnished together for $1.50 a year, compare in the amount and excellence of contents with the best of the four dollar magazines.

The Weekly Free Press and "The Household" together are furnished at $1.50 a year.

Liberal premiums, embracing yearly subscriptions to the various magazines, etc., are given for clubs. Address letters to

One of the comical sights of Leap Year will be a girl whispering a tale of love into the ear of a deaf man.

A young lady wishes to know a cure for chaps. Marry one of them, my dear; the rest will go away.

What a dream of home comfort it is to hear the happy tea-kettle singing "In the sweet boil and boil."

The proper way to check slander is to despise it; attempt to overtake and refute it, and it will outrun you.

No grander thing can a man do than to give a helping hand to a young man who has become discouraged.

Brigham Young left forty-two widows to remember him, and yet he is as destitute of a monument as is George Washington.

Kind words cost but little. It's the orders your wife gives at the dry goods stores that throws the cash account all askew.

Wife—"But, my dear, I shall catch cold coming down so late to let you in." Husband—"Oh, no, my love; I will rap you up well before you come down."

Gold from Europe continues to arrive here in such quantities that our young men can now have two sets of brass sleeve buttons without being considered extravagant.

This is the season when the draft which comes in through an open door makes many a man shudder. Particularly if it is a sight draft and is bro't in by a bank collector.

When a very respectable man is discovered committing a crime the proper thing for him to do is to ask the public to suspend public opinion until the thing is forgotton.

John says his mother makes a great cry if his sister goes out without her shade-hat. She don't want her to get freckled; but she doesn't seem to care a bit how much his father tans him.

Alphonso and Christina haven't quarreled yet, but the young queen is reported to have got her Dutch up when Alf stated that he didn't want his palace reeking with the fumes of sauer-kraut.

A man had a very wicked parrot, who swore terrible oaths. To cure the parrot of such a bad habit it was plunged in cold water every time he used language of the kind. One rainy day the parrot happened to see some dripping wet chickens go by his cage, and so he called out: "You miserable fools; been swearing, have you?"

Montreal Heard From.

R. L. Mosely, of Montreal, Canada, certified Sept. 27, 1879, that he had suffered terribly from dyspepsia, and was completely cured by taking Warner's Safe Bitters. He says: "My appetite is good, and I suffer no inconvenience from eating hearty meals." These Bitters are also a specific for all skin diseases.

Feels Young Again.

"My mother was afflicted a long time with Neuralgia and a dull, heavy, inactive condition of the whole system, headache, nervous prostration, and was almost helpless. No physicians or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters, with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over 70 years old.—We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family."—A lady, Providence, R. I.

LEAP YEAR DIFFICULTIES.

He was a nice young man, with cane, high hat and patent-leather boots. He strolled leisurely down Fourth avenue, puffing daintily upon a cigarette, and occasionally twirling the waxed ends of his moustache. He was accosted by a stout woman with a florid complexion.

"Top of the morning to ye, Mister Charley," said she.

"Good morning, Mrs. McGinness," said the nice young man.

"Me darlin' boy, would ye ——?" and she bestowed a bewitching smile upon him. He dodged out of her reach. The recollection that it was Leap Year rushed upon him. He answered:

"Madame — really — I can't — I am very sorry if I cause you pain—but my affections have already been bestowed upon another—and, madame—I can't—I can't marry you."

She gazed at him in astonishment, and then said, indignantly: "Who axed ye to marry me? The idea of the likes of me, a poor, lone widdy, wid four children to support by washin' axin' ye to marry me, I was only goin' to ax ye for that dollar for washin'."

He sighed and gave her a dollar, and walked sadly away.

A Wonderful Discovery.

For the speedy cure of Consumption and all diseases that lead to it, such as stubborn Coughs, neglected Colds Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Asthma, pain in the side and chest, dry hacking cough, tickling in the throat, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, and all chronic or lingering diseases of the throat and lungs. Dr. King's New Discovery has no equal and has established for itself a world-wide reputation. Many leading physicians recommend and use it in their practice. The formula from which it is prepared is highly recommended by all medical journals. The clergy and the press have complimented it in the most glowing terms. Go to your druggist and get a trial bottle free of cost, or regular size for 75 cts. For sale by M. Wright & Son, Tecumseh, Mich.

NOW SAVE THE RAGS.

The most noticeable, perhaps, of all the advances during the late "boom" has been in the price of rags which have more than doubled in value, and are now worth three cents and a half per pound. At this price, and even at much less, it will pay to save them and sell them. The same is true of old paper of nearly every kind, as by cleansing they are reconverted into white paper by the manufacturers.

In consequence of the scarcity of rags and old paper, the price of 'print' or paper for news purposes, has gone up from six and a half to ten cents at wholesale. If this price keeps up, there will be a general rise in the subscription price, as has indeed in many instances already occurred.

Almost any family can make enough in a year by selling rags and old paper to pay for all their reading matter.

Poverty and Suffering.

"I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did them no good.—I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well and none of us have seen a sick day since, and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost. I know it.

A WORKINGMAN."

The Bey of Tunis is 70 years old, and has no ships, little money, and badly armed and dressed soldiers. There are 150,000 Jews in the city—one-fifth of the entire population. The women wear no skirts of any kind; they have long stockings of many hues.

A Rochester Physician's Experience.

R. Calkiins, M. D., of Rochester, N. Y., certifies Oct. 6th, 1879, that he has used the Safe Kidney and Liver Cure in his practice for diseases of the kidneys and liver, and the result has been satisfactory in the extreme. He says: "I would now prescribe the same remedy to all similarly afflicted, and you are at liberty to so state in your testimonials."

BENSONS CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER

That the public may be protected against Imitations and Fraud we specially caution all purchasers of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS to see that the word CAPCINE on each plaster is spelled correctly. Do not allow some other plaster to be palmed off under similar sounding names, with the assurance that it is the same thing or as good. Bear in mind that the only object such vender can have is the fact that they can buy imitations at half the price of the genuine, and they hope by this substitution to gain a small additional profit.

THE RAILROAD PROSPECTS.

We herewith give our readers a brief review of the status of the Toledo & Milwaukee Railroad project at the present time.

The meetings held last week in Tecumseh, Cambridge and Franklin gave the boom a fresh start, and work is now actively progressing at every point on the line.

A letter received last Tuesday from Addison states that their subscriptions have now reached $25,000, and their quota will certainly be filled inside of one week. This news comes from one of their committee and can be relied on.

The news from Cambridge is equally cheering. Mr. Samuel Morey was in Tecumseh yesterday and he assured us that his town had already secured $12,000, and the remaining portion of their quota could be raised in forty-eight hours. In fact five different men have consented to assume as much of the balance as may be necessary, and they have notified Mr. Latcha that Cambridge's quota can be relied upon.

Franklin is moving on the entrenchments with vigor, and they are rapidly filling the quota of their town.—Meetings are being held in the different school houses every evening, and each meeting adds a good amount to the sum total already pledged.

In Tecumseh, the canvassing committee is at work this week, and commendable progress has been made, although there is a good deal of work to be done here yet.

In Ridgeway, the canvass is progressing lively, and the committee talk hopefully. A portion of the farmers in that town have subscribed liberally, but others who are equally able are slow in coming forward.

Upon a careful survey of the whole field, therefore, we say that the outlook for the new railroad is very encouraging. Still there is much hard work remaining to be done, and there are two or three facts connected with this business which people on the line ought to understand.

In the first place, the Tecumseh and Addison line is certain of securing this road, if every town on the line shall raise the sum allotted to it. And secondly, if any town shall fail to raise its full share, we are just as certain of losing the road. We may as well face the music first as last. The time for talk is past, and the time for action has come. No town need flatter itself that the other towns on the line will carry it through. Every township must raise its share. Unless they each and all do their duty, the road will certainly be constructed on some other line, and the present indications are that the Brooklyn and Clinton line will be the one selected. Strong influences are at work, not only in Clinton and Brooklyn, to divert the attention of our people, but those towns are receiving encouragement and assistance from other rival towns south of us. Hence it behooves the Franklin, Tecumseh and Ridgeway people to buckle to the work with renewed energy and pull the enterprise through.

Toledo is pushing her canvass vigorously. Mr. Latcha, President of the road, is in Toledo this week assisting their local committee, and he informs us that on Saturday last, the first day he was with them, they raised $10,000. Thus the outlook is favorable from all points.

All that remains to secure the success of the project and the absolute location of the road on the Tecumseh and Addison line, is the assistance of every one who is abundantly able to aid the enterprise in Franklin, Tecumseh and Ridgeway. Men must not hold back because their neighbors refuse to pay. Sign yourselves to-day and the chances are that your neighbor can be reasoned with and induced to give his subscription a few days hence. The citizens of these three towns are public spirited and enterprising men, and we do not believe they will let this opportunity slip, on account of the failure of a few men to do their duty. The road is open, the way is clear to secure this prize, and we feel very confident that the necessary pledges will be forthcoming.

YESTERDAY was Ash Wednesday, the first day of Lent.

THE TAX ON NEWSPAPERS.

The recent remarkable rise in the price of print paper, caused by the duty on the raw material from which paper is made, is likely to produce serious results in the newspaper business and book trade unless a remedy be found soon and applied. Many of the large city dailies have been compelled to reduce the size of their sheet or increase the price, and this course will eventually be adopted by the country press. Our exchanges are all beginning to investigate the question, and the very general sentiment seems to be that the duty on print paper and chemicals should be repealed. The same quality of print paper which now costs ten cents per pound can be purchased in Canada for six cents, the difference in price being wholly the result of an extortionate tariff on raw material and chemicals. The beauties of protection are here exemplified in a new and emphatic way. The present tariff is virtually a tax on industry and intelligence to enrich a few paper manufacturers and dealers in chemicals. The newspaper press of the country should make common cause in the matter and unanimously demand a reform.

Last year, during the yellow fever affliction in the South, the duty on quinine was repealed by a very decid- majority. It afforded a practical example which every one could appreciate of the outrageous character of protective duties, and as soon as Congress laid hold of the subject in earnest the duty on quinine was wiped out.

The present crisis in the journalistic business will probably produce a similar result. People are beginning to see and understand the fact that a protective tariff is a tax on the many for the benefit of the few, that every subscriber to a newspaper or purchaser of a book, is charged a higher price than necessary, simply that a few heavy manufacturers or dealers may make an hundred per cent. profit. Let the newspaper press make a combined effort for the repeal of the present tariff, and Congress will be compelled to heed the call.

THE PAPER MONOPOLY.

The newspapers are opening the campaign lively, for a modification of the present tariff so far as it effects the price of materials used in the manufacture of paper. A few extracts selected at random from our exchanges shows the drift of the tide. This is no party question. Every man who is interested in cheap reading matter must favor the repeal of this iniquitous tax.

The Adrian Times says: Some of the newspaper men who have dilated so much on the beneficial results of a high tariff, have an opportunity now to understand, as never before perhaps, the beauty of the system of legalized plunder. Within a few months the cost of white print paper in the United States has advanced fifty per cent. Paper that costs ten cents per pound here can be bought in Canada for six cents.

The Battle Creek Tribune has these pointed remarks: The rapid rise in print paper is bidding fair to work serious injury to the publishers of newspapers. They are the one class to which, it would seem, the revival of prosperity does not bring relief. That this is so, we must extend our thanks to the present barbarous system of tariff, an item in which is an enormous duty upon print paper and the chemicals employed in its manufacture. The pressure, however, which the heavy cost of paper is putting upon publishers, will be productive of no little good if it has the effect—and it seems likely to have—to arouse the press of the country to a sense of the injustice of the present duty. Nothing short of this would convert some publishers from their devotion to high protection.

The Chicago Times seconds the motion as follows: If people want cheap newspapers, let them beseech Congress to remove the duty on the chemicals used in manufacture of print paper. Print-paper can be bought in Canada to-day at about three cents per pound cheaper than in the States. This is because of free chemicals in that country. But there is an American duty on foreign print paper of 20 per cent., so that the article abroad is of no avail here. If we, in this country, could have chemicals free of duty, the American paper-maker would be able to beat the foreigner very materially in the price at which he could sell. Let us have free chemicals.

And the Niles Mirror frees its mind on the subject thusly: The press throughout the country, without distinction of party, should unite for a repeal of the duty on paper. The manufacturers of this country have formed a combination to extort from the publishers and people beyond all justice and reason, ten cents a pound for printing paper, while in Canada it is sold for seven cents per pound. Repeal the duty and if our manufacturers, with the immense water power of this country, with all the facilities which nature and art can give them, cannot compete with the world, then let them retire.

Why does print paper cost ten cents per pound in Detroit, when the same quality of print can be bought for six or seven cents at Windsor, just across the Detroit river? Why is this thus? The answer can be put in one short sentence. The present protective tariff is the cause of it. Wipe out the duty on paper and chemicals.

AMONG OUR EXCHANGES.

Why Not Be Generous?

New York Tribune.—Why not be generous and give David Davis a boom? To be sure it wouldn't am'nt to much, but it would amount to all it is worth.

A Good Masquerade.

Chicago News.—The Presidential contest is a very good masquerade; but it will be difficult to tell who are the devils and who are the fools until after the unmasking in the conventions.

Presidential Plowing.

Cincinnati Enquirer.—We give another batch of interviews this morning on the Presidency. Tilden is still tearing up much ground in Thurman's territory, and Blaine is plowing up Sherman's fields.

Admires His Pluck.

New York World.—Mr. Parnell in his war with the newspaper press of America reminds us of the memorable contest that a bull, presumably of the purest Irish breed, had with an express train. We are free to admire his pluck, but we have our own opinion about his discretion.

Grant and Blaine.

Detroit Evening News.—The contest for the republican nomination is practically figured down to Grant, Blaine and the dark horse; and if the two former unite their forces, as it seems quite likely they will, it will probably be an unanimous nomination on the first ballot.

Understands His Business.

Philadelphia Times. — Governor Cornell, of New York, is already accused of using his high position to aid Senator Conkling's schemes for a 3rd term. Cornell seems to have a pretty fair idea about what Senator Conkling made him a Governor for. There is nothing like understanding your business.

Putting It Rather Strong.

Philadelphia Times.—"Our republican form of government," says the Harrisburg platform, "will be a signal failure when any political party can succeed in defying the public will as shown by the people at the ballot-box." Isn't this putting it rather strong, considering that the Republican party succeeded in that very thing in 1876 and republican institutions survived the strain?

The Remedy Will be Applied.

San Francisco Call.—"The anti-Chinese crusade has commenced anew in California," says the New York Tribune, alluding to the strong ground taken against Chinese immigration by Governor Perkins in his inaugural message. This is a mistake. The "crusade" has never ceased, nor will it cease until California gits rid of the Chinese affliction. So far as State legislation can affect anything, the Tribune may safely assume that a remedy against it will be applied.

The Grant Boom on the Wane.

Detroit Free Press.—The Chicago Inter-Ocean, a devoted apostle of the third term, finds in Grant's demeanor during the Cuban earthquake ample reason for electing him President of the United States. It dwells with intense satisfaction upon the fact that he did not "seize his trousers in one hand, his boots in another and scamper down the palace staircase." But the Grant "boom" is so hopelessly dying out that a faithful and despairing disciple may be pardoned for clutching at almost anything even at Grant's trousers and boots.

Uncle Sammy's Last Boom.

Philadelphia Times.—Uncle Sammy's last nuptial boom lasted only a day. It has gone the way of all other booms. More's the pity. The alarming frequency of these reports of his intended marriage in various parts of the country and to numerous interesting young ladies should be a solemn reminder to the bachelor of Gramercy Park that the country will not be content until he is married and settled.—He is sixty-six years old, and has had a plenty of time not only to sow his wild oats, but to harvest the usufruct.

The Famine in Ireland.

New York Herald.—There is no time to be lost when one-third of a million of people are crying for bread. We hope all Americans will join heartily in a movement for the relief of so many famishing people. We plead with Irishmen to bury, or at least postpone, their differences, and join heart and soul for the relief of suffering which they are best qualified to understand. Let every man whose sympathies are stirred constitute himself a collector and forward subscriptions. A large part of our population consists of Irishmen by birth or parentage, and the prosperity of our country has been built up by immigrant Irish labor. Multitudes of the people who are starving are near relatives of our own citizens, and it would be a disgrace to look on coldly while they perish by the most piteous of all deaths. Look at our terrible tables and judge whether this earnest appeal is not justified by the situation. No true man or true women should be deaf to the despairing cry, "For God's sake send us bread or money!"

MR. FULLER, who lives in the old Pennock house in Brownville, was robbed of $104 last Sunday night. He had been to Adrian the day before and got some money, and left it in a wallet in his pant s pocket. Upon getting up Monday morning, he found his pants in the door-yard and the money was missing. No clue to the thief.

Examination of Public Buildings.

WE are informed that the special committee of the Common Council appointed to inspect halls, churches, school houses and other places of public assemblage, on application of owners or occupants, have completed their labors so far as applications have been made under the law.

The committee find the Opera House to be the only building entitled to a "certificate of safety" without some changes.

The School board have ordered the necessary changes in the school houses of the village, and the outside doors of the Central and East branch buildings are now made to open outward. The doors of the various churches should be changed in the same manner, before the committee will deem it their duty to issue certificates to them. The Presbyterian church, Reform Club, Odd Fellows and Masonic Lodges and the various Clubs of the village have not at this date made application to the committee.

MICHIGAN'S PIONEERS.

The seventh annual meeting of the State pioneers at Lansing, full 500 in attendance, took place on the 4th and 5th of February, in Representatives' Hall. On the restrum was seated President M. Shoemaker, of Jackson; on either side Judge Miller, Ray City; Hon. O. C. Comstock, Marshall; Hon. W. J. Baxter, Joresville; Hon. J. J. Adam, Tecumseh. Above them the commemorative banner "Welcome Pioneers."

The president's address was able and talented. He first dwelt on the importance of securing an accurate history of the pioneers before the chief actors pass from his life. The first generation laid and planted the foundation from which has grown all that the present generation now enjoy; from the results of their wise actions the present great prosperity of the State had sprung. And that we now have a population more energetic, more intelligent, better educated and as enterprising as any existing country.

This meeting was a decided success, more in attendance than ever before. The catalogue now numbers 450 pioneers. The second volume of Pioneer Collections, 650 pages, is now ready, and for sale at $1.25 each, and will be at T. Adamson's in a few days.

IMPORTANT LEGAL DECISION.

At the January term of the Supreme Court, held at Lansing, the report of the referee, Hon. John J. Adam, in the case against R. H. Morrison, defaulting treasurer of the Old Fellows, was sustained. Justice Graves in his opinion, says:

The defendants filed ten exceptions, and the circuit court sustained them and entered judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff brought error. All the exceptions are now abandoned excepting two, and they are only faintly insisted on. They have no merit. They first complained that the referee did not specially find in answer to five specific requests made therefor by defendant's counsel. In the first place, the requests call for nothing beyond the findings made of any apparent materiality. The remaining exception, not waived, is to the referee's conclusion of law that the plaintiff recover the amount reported, and the position is that the whole finding is bad because the sum ascertained exceeds the penalty in the bond. It is difficult to regard this objection as seriously intended. The greater includes the less, and it will hardly be claimed that because the debt exceeds the security, the creditor must not only bear the loss of the excess, but of the other also. The finding shows that the plaintiff is entitled to damages up to the amount of the bond, and there is no reason why it should not recover them.

Judgment of the circuit court reversed, and judgment in debt for plaintiff must be entered here for the penal sum mentioned in the bond, and also for the like sum in damages found by the referee, and the plaintiff will recover costs of both courts.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., FEB. 12, 1880.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

THE suit of Slayton & Son vs. Jacob Cheever comes on for trial to-day.

THE railroad office at Lenawee Junction has been moved East a few rods.

THE High School Lyceum has got well started. Meetings on Monday evening of each week.

THE official report of Q. M. General Davies is at hand. The State militia now consists of three regiments of eight companies each.

SAMUEL BARLOW last week sold eleven hogs in Tecumseh which averaged 495 pounds each in weight, and one of them tipped the scales at 674 pounds.

TOWNSHIP Treasurer McNiel has settled with the County Treasurer, and a less amount of taxes were uncollected this year than for several years previously.

Clinton News: This is what might be called an open winter.—Tecumseh Herald. Yes, so open that if Tecumseh don't do something for her streets soon some of her citizens will fall in.

THE officers of the county agricultural society have fixed the date for the next annual fair. It will be held on Tuesday, September 28, and continue through Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

THERE will be a donation visit for the benefit of Rev. J. Kilpatrick at the residence of Isaiah Heudershot in Macon, on Thursday afternoon and evening of next week, Feb. 19th inst. All are invited to attend.

M. C. HENDRESS, A. M., of Sharon, Pa., has been spending a couple of weeks in Tecumseh as the guest of Thos. Boyd. Mr. Hendress was highly pleased with our village and the surrounding section of country.

A GENERAL order has been promulgated by Brigadier Gen. W. H. Withington, requiring all companies of state troops to have a parade in honor of Washington's birth-day, on the 23d inst., instead of the 22d, which comes on Sunday.

JOHN C. SHARP, of Jackson, has been appointed census supervisor of this district. There will be two hundred enumerators in the district. The enumerators for this section have not yet been appointed but some good names have been already sent in.

A LETTER lately received from W. H. Osborn, of Milwaukee, President of the Wisconsin Malleable Iron Co. says that business is on the boom there at present. Their establishment is now employing one hundred and seventy-five men, with more work than they can do. Pig iron has reached a figure almost as high as in 1873 and bids fair to continue.

FRANK E. SMALLIDGE, of Detroit, was in town over Sunday making his brother William a visit. Frank has been away from Tecumseh for ten years, and has now got settled into a good business conducting a Drug Store at 701 Jefferson Ave. Detroit.—Frank is evidently doing well in his present location, and his old Tecumseh friends will be glad to learn of his success.

Adrian Press: Tecumseh had a big railroad meeting Tuesday; things look a little "blue" for our sister town.—They are requested to furnish $40,000, and as they have only $15,000 subscribed, a big halt was experienced.—It looks as though they would have to come over to Adrian to ride on a new road. If it had been to beat Tom Navin on a base ball match they would have put up $40,000 in just 30 minutes.

A GENTLEMAN from Chicago has been in town this week making arrangements for a new drop curtain for the opera House. The curtain will have an elegant landscape painted in the center and the margin will be filled with business cards. It will be a reasonable plan for advertising in an attractive manner. The agent had no trouble in securing the proper number of cards, and the new curtain will be completed shortly.

JAS. HECK, elder brother of the "Heck Brothers" of this village, was in town last week. In case the new railroad should go through they propose to sell their milling business in Flowerfield, and concentrate their whole capital here in Tecumseh which will double their business here, and Mr. Jas. Heck will then bring his family here. The firm have just closed a contract to ship 500 barrels per week to Londonderry, Ireland.

THE Health committee of the Common Council are making arrangements to have a series of articles on sanitary subjects, written by different citizens of Tecumseh, published in the HERALD. The articles will begin about April 1st and continue each week for six months. Sufficient pledges have already been obtained to insure the preparation of these articles and the plan has the hearty endorsement of Dr. Kedsie, chairman of the State Board of Health. A splendid idea.

THE new date for Burdette's lecture at Blissfield is Feb. 26th.

THERE was a big crowd in town last Saturday, and trade was booming.

WILL. D. ROBBINS is at home on a short visit from Ann Arbor. He will return next Monday.

ED. ROWLAND has a new advertising card this week. He has the largest shop in town now.

WILLIS MERRITT is in Jackson this week in attendance upon the Grand Lodge of the Knights of Honor.

REMEMBER the entertainment given by the ladies of the Presbyterian Society at the Opera House this evening.

GUS SLAYTON has been shipping several car loads of lumber from Deerfield to the Michigan car works at Detroit.

OUR Flower Seeds have arrived.—Persons who are entitled to a package can get them at any time by "calling around."

HUGH RICHARD and wife, of Jackson, were in town last week on a general visiting tour among their friends here and in Raisin.

THE Farmers' Institute at Hudson on Monday and Tuesday last was largely attended and the sessions throughout were very interesting.

WE have received a large supply of our Michigan Maps. Subscribers who are entitled to a map can now obtain them by calling at the HERALD counting room.

THE Merchants' Hotel is nearly ready for occupancy and Mr. Sink expects to move into his new quarters early next week. The house will be called "Sink's Hotel" hereafter.

P. B. SWICK has for sale a new style of hold-back irons for buggy thills which are very convenient.—They are fastened on the under side of the thill and the hold-back is slipped into them.

OUR friends must bear in mind that anonymous communications sent to the HERALD will be rejected. We have received two or three such lately and they were carefully consigned to the waste basket.

THE Gardener's Monthly for February is at hand. This is without exception one of the best horticultural magazines now published. It contains departments on Flower Gardens, Greenhouse Gardening, Fruit and Vegetable Gardening, Forestry, Natural History and Science and Editorial matter. It is well filled with interesting and instructive reading and is a perfect gem typographically.—Subscriptions taken at club rates at the HERALD office.

OUR whilom friend Mr. John F. Murray has lately received the appointment of State agent of the American Insurance Co., of Newark, N. J. The Post and Tribune of a recent date has this item:

In another column of this issue appears the statement of the American Insurance company of Newark, N. J., showing cash assets of nearly $1,500,000. The company has just been admitted by Commissioner Row to do business in this state. Mr. John F. Murray, present state agent of the Continental insurance company, will in addition to his present duties, have charge of the American in Michigan.

BELOW are the names of those pupils attending school in District No. 1, of Raisin, who have been neither tardy nor absent during the past month: Charlie Brown, Jimmie Brown, Freddie Brown, Emma Brown, Ella Brown, Jacob Brown, Lena Brown, Nettie Wilson, Leona Beevers, Cora Dean, Lizzie Beamish, Warren Wooden, Hattie Beevers. Most perfect in deportment: Emma Brown, Lena Brown Walter Raymond. The Brown family seems to be pretty extensively represented in this school.

WE have had placed upon our table this week a work containing a portion of Masonic History which has never before been brought together, and we find it to be a book which should be in the hands of every member of the fraternity, as it contains portions of history which are concise and authentic, and with which all should be familiar. Mr. B. Guiwits, Gen. Agent for Southern Mich., will call upon all parties in this vicinity wishing a copy of the work, and we bespeak for it the reception which it deserves.

LAST week the wooden partition between McCowen's furniture room and the old barber shop was torn down, and the two rooms thus thrown into one. This week a general painting and cleaning has taken place and the furniture is now being put in place. The present room is the largest front in the village, being thirty feet in width, and will make a splendid furniture salesroom, as there will be an excellent opportunity to display goods. Mr. McCowen proposes to enlarge his business considerably during the present season, and keep a better and larger assortment of furniture than ever before. He certainly has a heavy stock on hand and a fine room, in which to display it, and we have no doubt he will be rewarded for his enterprise by an increase of trade.

LOOK through our real estate notices on the fourth page.

THE roads are improving rapidly and farmers can now come to town with a good load of grain or wood.

DR. H. L. STEWART has a new card this week. He is a believer in the virtues of advertising.

A. W. SLAYTON is taking in 60 loads of lumber this week, composed of ash, oak, basswood, walnut, etc.

GEO. HEESEN, of the Palace Clothing House, is bound to be up with the times. See his new advertising card on first page.

WE have received the program of exercises for the Macon Grange meetings for the ensuing three months. It will appear next week.

MR. M. S. B. TEUAX who has charge of the Detroit Branch of Bullock's Music House, is spending a few days in Tecumseh on business.

MR. E. P. SPRAGUE, the organist, arrived in town this morning, and will certainly be in attendance at the organ concert to-morrow evening.

JAMES LOWRY has a supply of Irish Dulce, direct from the old sod. Our Irish friends know what the article is and other people will soon learn to use it.

THE railroad canvassing committee of Tecumseh are at work this week, and they have made a very creditable addition to our list of subscriptions since last Monday.

JOHN J. ADAM, of this village, and F. A. Dewey, of Cambridge, were present at the State Pioneer meeting in Lansing last week. F. A. Dewey was elected Vice President of the Society for the ensuing year.

SAM. MCCLURE is now conducting the business formerly run by McClure Brothers in the old Slayton Planing Mill. He is prepared to make sash, doors and blinds in first-class style, and do all other work in that line.—See his new card elsewhere.

THE Organ Concert at the Presbyterian Church which was advertised for last evening has been postponed till to-morrow, Friday. There was a collision on the Central railroad, near Ann Arbor, which detained Mr. Sprague, the organist, so that he could not get here in time for the concert.

QUITE an excitement has been caused this week in Blissfield by the death of Mrs. Lothrop of Three Rivers who was being treated by Dr. Baker for the opium habit. She died very suddenly on Saturday last. The Doctor claimed that she had become so much better that he had ceased treating her for the opium habit, and for the past four weeks had been perscribing for a disordered stomach. An inquest was held on Monday last.

W. J. KIES opens his new clothing store to-day for customers. He has a very neat store, well arranged and finely furnished, and he has placed therein a very fine and well assorted stock of clothing and gents' furnishing goods, hats and caps, underwear, etc. He has employed Harry Root as clerk, who will make a valuable assistant for him. Will and Harry are now prepared to receive their friends and we bespeak for them a good trade.

THE Michigan Farmer quotes our table showing the shipments from this station during 1879, and says:

During the year of 1879, Tecumseh exported 1,533,640 pounds of wheat, 42,345 barrels of flour and 118 car loads of live stock. Pretty good for a village with no competing line of railroad, says the local paper of that place, but Tecumseh is located in one of the finest agricultural sections in this great State, and the farmers there know their business. Of course Tecumseh is bound to make a good showing.

ONE of those pleasant parties, intended to surprise all interested, bro't together some 40 genial friends at the residence of Mr. & Mrs. Betts, in Brownville, last Monday evening.—As the last one arrived (No. 40) it occurred to Mr. Betts that he was just forty years of age, and he seemed pleased to note that his wife had tho't of it during the day and prepared a bountiful reception. A happy evening and good night left the host and hostess to meditate that it would take them all summer to return the call; still they said "come agin."

A RAILROAD meeting was held in the Lowe District in Ridgeway last Tuesday evening. Mr. I. N. Pilbeam took the chair. Remarks were made by Messers Stacy and Baxter of Tecumseh, Justus Lowe and several others of Ridgeway, and the general feeling seemed to be decidedly in favor of the road. The farmers in that section are favorable to the project but they do not subscribe as freely as they ought to do. Still with proper effort on the part of the canvassing committee, a good amount can be secured in that neighborhood.

Burlingame will sell at auction, 6 miles South of Tecumseh, ¾ mile East of Little Hope corners, on Thursday, Feb. 19, 1880, at 12 o'clock M., 7 milch cows, 1 fat cow, 4 yearlings, 4 calves, 8 lambs, 21 shoats, quantity of hay, 200 bush. corn in the ear, Kirby reaper and mower, new land roller, &c. THE RAILROAD IS COMING.

Fremont, Ohio, has had an attack of the Railroad fever and has it bad too, as the following taken from the Fremont Journal will show. If this is not poetry, it must be blank verse. At all events it is quite applicable to this latitude just at present.

The railroad
Is coming—
Stand out of the way,
Moss-backs,
Skinflints,
Fossils;
Whoop-her up
Mechanics,
Laboring men,
Retail dealers,
Manufacturers and shippers,
If anybody gets on the track,
Run over him,
Mash him,
Grind him to sausage,
Stuff him for a mummy,
Hang him on a telegraph pole,
Sling him over the wires,
There let him dry in the wind
That others
May see him,
And smell him,
And shun him,
For we are railroad men.
And we ourselves have said it,
And so has everybody
Except a few.
Their graves are dug,
And we mean to chuck
Them in.
And build turn tables over them,
And the engines will Come every day,
And waltz around,
And whistle their doom,
Forever and ever!
For we live on the plains,
That blossom as the rose,
When the railroad comes.
Open your gate, ye farmers,
Masters of the trade
God taught to man;
Let in the iron horse;
The noblest steed
That ever crossed your field;
Sired in England,
Trained in America,
A thorough bred
That can make his mile in a minute.
Haul all your grain to market,
And double every dollar
You bet on him.
You want it,
And so do your sisters,
Your cousins,
And your aunts.
Want what?
Why, the railroad!
So let her boom,
Louder than thunder,
Louder than Grant—
The dickens take politics
'Till the railroad comes.

A WELCOME LETTER.

Ezra F. Blood Esq. of Tecumseh, is a member of the State Pioneer Society, but this winter he was unable to attend the annual meeting, on account of his infirm health. He regretted his inability to attend, but his disappointment was relieved the other day by the receipt of a kind letter which explains itself:

LANSING, FEB. 7th, 1880.

EZRA F. BLOOD,

Dear Sir; At the meeting of the State Pioneers on the 5th inst. the following resolution offered by Dr. O. C. Comstock of Marshall, was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved that the Corresponding Secretary of the State Pioneer Society, transmit the kindly greeting of the Society, and also to each, a volume of Vol. 2, Pioneer Collections, to the venerable John D. Pierce of Ypsilanti, Gen'l J. W. Brown of Toledo O., and Ezra F. Blood of Tecumseh, members of this society, but unable to attend on account of increasing infirmities of age."

In accordance with this resolution I herewith extend to you our kindly greetings and regret that you were not able to attend the meeting, one of the best the society has ever held.

I also send by same mail as this, Vol. 2 of Pioneer Collections just from the press. Yours very truly,

GEO. H. GREENE,
COR. SEC'Y.

Mr. Blood has received the volume and is highly pleased with it, as it contains many historical sketches, of which he has personal recollection.

The Detroit Evening News of last Tuesday contained a lengthy article, showing the preferences of the leading Republicans of Michigan on the presidential question. The News sent a circular to its 150 correspondents requesting them to interview several of the leading Republicans in their respective localities and ascertain their real preferences as to a presidential candidate. From these reports the News compiles a table, showing 827 for Grant as first choice, 1,600 for Blaine, 611 for Sherman and 56 for Washburne. The Tecumseh correspondent gives his views of the public sentiment here, as follows:

TECUMSEH, Jan. 28.—After a somewhat careful canvass of the field, I find that the Blaine element seems to be in the majority at this place. The younger element of "stalwart" republicanism seems to favor Blaine. Grant follows Blaine closely. Many persons, on being asked who they favored for President, would first answer Grant and then say, no, I guess that will not do, three terms are too many to confer upon any one man, especially when we have so many able and qualified men for the Presidency. Sherman, as first choice, has but few followers at present. Washburne is very favorably mentioned, and is the first choice in some cases.

A Card.

We desire to publicly express our thanks for the sympathy and kind offices of our neighbors and the community during our late affliction.

MR. AND MRS. CHAS. F. SMITH.

H. SCHROEDER has gone to Cleveland on a visit. He will return in about two weeks.

THE last competitive shoot for the prize rifle was shot off yesterday by Co. C, and was won by Chester Haynes by a score of 32. As this is the third time in succession that he has beaten all competitors, the rifle now becomes his private property. Good for Chet.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

THE INDIAN BUREAU SCANDAL

Presidential Preferences—An Important Supreme Court Decision.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 6, '80.

The recent exposures in the Indian bureau have proved a pretty hard blow to Mr. Schurz's reform policy.—To everybody except the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Hayt, the new discharged Commissioner, has long been known to be unworthy of his position. The bureau has been managed most disreputably, and present developments show that the crowd in charge left Government pillage as bad as they found it there. The strange part of it is that Mr. Schurz has been so long finding them out. And now these recently discovered frauds have started the cry again for the removal of the Indian bureau to the War Department.—Honest Sherman, who hates frauds and shams, whatever may be his own faults, is rather glad than otherwise that the Indian office has turned out so badly. He has been fighting Hayt or rather Shurtz ever since this administration began. Sherman treated the Indian question practically, because he knew all about it. Schurz treated it on the civil service reform policy, the Christianizing policy. He gave the Indians prayer books, and the Indians returned scalping knives, and in further expression of gratitude terminated numerous outrages on the female captives. Sherman does not personally want the Indian Bureau in the War Department. The transfer would entail an immense increase of work and responsibility on the army, which the officers do not want. But Sherman thinks the transfer is for the public good.

All attempts to obtain a free expression from the Republican members of the House as to their preference for a Presidential candidate have failed.—The average Congressman prefers to retain his convictions until after the election, when he is shrewd enough to say "I told you so." Another plan however, has partially succeeded in getting an opinion from a large number of the republican members. The names of Blaine, Sherman and the ex-President were printed upon slips and duplicates sent to each republican member, requesting the member to check or write the name of his choice on the slip or the probable choice of his constituents and return the letter sent with the slips to one of the New York delegation. Secrecy was insured and a candid expression expected. Mr. Hammond, of the Eighteenth New York district, acted as teller and the whole number of answers received was eighty-one out of one hundred and thirty-four. Of the members who indicated their choice forty-two were for Blaine, fourteen for the ex-president, ten for Sherman, four for Washburne and eleven blank. The expression on behalf of their constituencies showed but little variation.—For Blaine forty-five; for the ex-president, fifteen; for Sherman, seven; Washburne, three, and blank eleven.

An incident transpired in the Supreme Court on Monday, which attracted the attention of the judges, lawyers and spectators. Mrs. Lockwood, the only female lawyer ever admitted to practice before the court, presented for admission Samuel R. Lowry, of Huntsville, Ala., an African of the deepest original color. Since the day during the war when Senator Sumner appeared in the court and made the motion for the admission of Mr. John S. Rock, the first colored member of the Bar ever admitted to the roll of attorneys practising before the Supreme Court, there has not been such a sensation in that solemn chamber as this when an aspirant for the honor of the democratic nominal n for the Presidency joined hands with his colored brother in taking the oath upon the holy evangelists. The fact, too, that Mr. Lowry was vouched for by a woman was also an event in the history of the Court, it being the first motion of the kind that Mrs. Lockwood has made since Congress passed the act requiring the Supreme Court and Court of Claims to recognize her right to practice before them.

A case of general interest has just been decided in the District Supreme Court, having been pending more than a year. F. A. Lehmann, the well known Patent Attorney, sued the Pullman Palace Car Company to recover damages for failing to provide him with a sleeping berth between Washington and New York, after having sold him a ticket for a berth on that day and train. For some reason no sleeper was attached to the train when it left this city, and Mr. Lehmann had notice of it when it hitched on at Baltimore. He remained all night in an ordinary car and being in delicate health was made sick, hence his suit for damages. He obtained a judgement for $300 which the Supreme Court has affirmed on appeal from the court below. This is the first case of the kind in which this arrogant monopoly has been beaten.

Henry Willis, of Battle Creek, is now engaged in stirring up the Calhoun county farmers to establish a big pecking house and pack their own pork.

The latest case of small-pox at Grand Rapids developed in the Eagle hotel. The health officers have ordered the hack-men not to take guests there at present.

Five young men of Buchanan were arrested on a charge of disturbing a church oyster supper. Two were discharged and the others fined $10 apiece and costs. They appeal to a higher court.

It is now rumored that Prof. Watson, late of the university of Michigan, is to be made director of the Lick observatory of California, with a fund of several millions (more or less) to draw from in buying telescopes and other things needed to equip that which is promised to be the finest observatory in the world.

East Saginaw was to have sent a delegation of about two dozen heavy lumbermen to the Chicago convention, but only one or two of the members of the delegation appointed had spunk or loose change enough to go. This leads the Herald to think that the East Saginaw board of trade is only a shin-toasting story-telling club.

The Portland Observer states for a fact that in the matter of the Howard City lottery the net receipts for the sale of tickets did not amount to $6,000, and had not Coburn, the manager of the scheme, drawn the large prize—the Coburn Exchange at Howard City—he would have been financially ruined. As it was he had 9,400 unsold tickets or just 9,400 chances in the lottery. The financial ruin, however, didn't ensue—to any very great extent.

A small tubular boiler in a drill house at the salt works of A. T. Bliss & Bro., at Silwaukee, exploded about 7 o'clock on the morning of the 3d, tearing out one end of the boiler house and throwing the boiler forty feet. Joseph St. John had two ribs broken and was generally bruised.—Jas. Sheffor was also considerably bruised. Low water was the probable cause. Damage about $500.

Neuberger's store at Marquette was broken into Feb. 2. The burglar broke out a light of glass from the back window. The safe was not injured in any way, and it is supposed that it was opened by some one having the combination. An iron box inside the safe, containing some $50 or $60, is missing, but none of the clothing was stolen. There is at present no clue to the robbers.

There are at present 814 convicts in the Jackson prison. The receipts for admissions during January were $121. For the ensuing month prisoners will work nine hours and fifty minutes per day, an increase of fifty minutes over January.

On Saturday, at Bay City, a man giving his name as David C. Kilpatrick was arrested charged with forgery in Guelph, Canada, to the extent of $14,000. The Canadian officers had given him up as lost, but two Bay City policemen did not.

Frank Nadeau, while crossing a railroad bridge at Monroe on the night of January 27, heard the train coming, became excited and fell through, breaking a shoulder-blade and receiving other injuries, so that he died two days after.

At a meeting of the Athletic Association of the University the Secretary was instructed to challenge Racine to play a return game of foot-ball at Ann Arbor sometime this spring, on the same conditions as the one in Chicago. The Secretary was further instructed to confer with Cornell and Toronto, with a view to arranging games with their teams also, if possible, this spring. It was also further decided to have a tournament in June.

A remarkable subsidence of land occurred at the mouth of White Lake on the 18th. The steamer Snook was lying on the north side of the new channel, tied to one of the piles, when many of the crew observed that a considerable portion of the sand hill adjacent was suddenly disappearing, taking with it the portion of the pier to which the Snook was attached.—Where there was formerly a hill is now 15 to 18 feet of water.

Charges have been preferred by a number of attorneys against Justice C. W. Root, of Lansing, charging him with certain irregularities. He says they are false.

What relation does the spur of the moment bear to the point of time?

Regulate the Secretions.

In our endeavors to preserve health it is of the utmost importance that we keep the secretory system in perfect condition. The well known remedy Kidney-Wort, has specific action upon the kidneys, liver and bowels. Use it instead of dosing with vile bitters or drastic pills. It is purely vegetable, and is prompt but mild in action.

Winter Butter.

Let a farmer divide his white winter butter into two lots, while yet in the form of cream, and for one make use of Perfected Butter Color, made by Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt., while the other goes to market without color, and he will discover on what course his interest depends. This color gives the fine, rich, golden yellow of first quality June butter, and is not tinged with the dull red tint, objected to in most butter colors.

How to make crockery ware—Don't use it.

Piles! Piles! Piles!

Do you know what it is to suffer with Piles? If you do, you know what is one of the worst torments of the human frame. The most perfect cure ever known is Kidney-Wort. It cures constipation, and then its tonic action restores health to the diseased bowels, and prevents recurrence of the disease. Try it without delay.

The little ones love it, and often cry for more—what? "Dr. Sellers' Cough Syrup," which cures them of coughs, colds, and whooping cough.

THE FARMERS' PAGE.

NORTHERN LENAWEE FARMERS' CLUB.

(This Club will hold its meetings regularly on the first and third Thursdays of each month, at the Reform Club Hall in Tecumseh, at 2 o'clock P. M. until further notice. All are heartily welcomed and cordially invited to attend. Communications thankfully received. Correspondence solicited from other clubs, especially where co-operative action can accomplish desirable results. All letters should be addressed to E. L. Russell, Sec., Tecumseh, Mich.)

THURSDAY, Feb. 5, 1880.

There seems to be a growing desire for farmers to meet and counsel together. The roads were passible, a fine day, and a good attendance of the Club as the result, composed of farmers from all directions, far and near, including some visitors and some new members; and if appearances indicate anything they all enjoy these times of gathering in friendly and social intercourse.

The usual business was soon dispatched.

Mr. C. Wells stated that some sheep were dying in his neighborhood with symptoms similar to blind staggers, and a discharge of a greenish frothy matter from the mouth and nose; he would like to know what the disease was and the cause.

Messrs. Benedict, Waldron, Simonds, Griswold, Smalzer and others agreed that too much salt feed at long intervals, without access to water, would cause death by bloating, but without other symptoms.

Mr. Simonds had lost some similarly affected, and his neighbor called it grub in the head. He cut open the head and found plenty of them, and thought that was what troubled the sheep Mr. Wells described. He tho't it proceeded from the egg of a fly in the nose.

Mr. Hanley thought Mr. Wells could find them if he would open the head just above the eye. He had taken out a table-spoonful with a knife, and thought it could be done while the sheep was alive without affecting the brain if they had not worked in too deep. He turned a little turpentine in the nose and thought it prevented further loss.

Mr. Wells thought tarring the nose would prevent the effects of the fly.

A neighbor of Mr. Waldron had lost sheep with similar symptoms, and syringed a little turpentine in the nose as a preventative from further loss. He recommended putting tar in a trough and feeding salt on top of it as a preventative from the effects of the fly.

Mr. Richard would like to know of some desirable and practicable way of constructing a drain from a kitchen sink; he had tried various kinds but had not yet found anything that proved satisfactory.

Mr. Goodrich the same.

Mr. Arner had tried a stone drain with a stone reservoir, and thought it a success.

Some prefered tile and some boards and some recommended tile with a pipe from the roof of the house emptying into it. Mr. Wells used six inch tile, arranged so that a portion could be taken up, and the whole length cleaned and washed out. But no one had seemed to hit upon a true system. As they were denounced as sources of disease by the boards of health, the President would avoid the difficulty by not having any and depend upon a surface drain.

Next came the subject of Insurance, the announcement of which no doubt had called many out.

The following resolution was read and accepted for discussion.

WHEREAS, We believe as expressed in the Charter of the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Lenawee County, that "a mutual association is the true method for farmers to adopt in insurance," and that said company was "formed from among farmers" for their mutual protection against loss by fire, and that "no other than farm property belonging to members can be insured" therein; and also that while they are paying for their own protection they are performing a christian act by "doing unto others as they would have others do unto them."

WHEREAS, Nearly all farmers have adopted the use of steam for threshing, believing it to be a saving of grain, cheaper, more expeditious, and more humane to dumb brutes, and adding but little, if any, to the risks by fire, where proper precautions are taken, therefore

Resolved, That the Directors of the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of Lenawee County make no distinction by altering, amending or construing the Charter and By-Laws of said company so as to preclude the use of steam for threshing, or so as to create two classes of policies or a division of said company, where due precautions are taken. But if said Charter or By-Laws do now preclude the use of steam, that the directors should so amend them as to allow of its use under proper restrictions.

There seemed to be four sides to the question. Some could not vote for the resolution because they had not given it proper attention. Some because they thought it too premature; that we were yet inexperienced, and employing incompetent engineers, and imperfect engines, and recommended going slow and waiting until we got rid of some of these "old rattle-traps" of engines. Some thought that we could not well vote upon the question until we knew what the restrictions were; if the Directors would publish the restrictions and they were satisfactory, then all would vote for the resolution. Some argued that it was not just, inasmuch as some were insured who never used threshing machine, and that the risks were more hazardous, and that life and property were exposed; that some people were naturally careless and reckless, and it was not just that those who were naturally cautious and careful should be obliged to stand their losses for them. That according to the evidence here to-day, there were many unsafe engines and careless engineers, that a majority present would not employ, still some one was constantly employing them; while some were not members of the insurance company preferring to run their own risk and stand their own losses.

Those who favored the resolution claimed that the Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company was not only a just but a benevolent institution, where farmers banded together and pledged themselves to assist each other in case of misfortune and loss. That some farmers were so fortunate as to be free from all embarrassments, debts and encumbrances, with plenty of available means, so that they could survive any probable loss without suffering or distress. Such were perfectly justifyable in carrying their own risks if they so prefered. While a majority of farmers were not so fortunately situated, and a severe loss by fire, and especially at the season of the year, and at the time of threshing, would involve them in financial ruin and consequent distress. Men under these circumstances were not justifiable in assuming such risks as long as they had a safe, cheap and practical means of protection, in an economical manner as could be devised, as they did not have to contribute to the support of a hoard of high-toned officers, but only donating to the suffering, and paying only for what was necessary to carry on the business; they had not the claims to public sympathy and charity as though they were willing to contribute their proportional mite towards relieving a brother farmer in a time of disaster.

It was claimed that some members of the company never used threshing machines. But it was farm property that was to be insured, and most farmers used threshing machines, and most of them steam power, and in this case, as in all others the majority should rule. Some American citizens had no children of their own, still if Americans and living in this free country they contribute to education.

It was no longer a question whether farmers would use steam power or not, or about its cheapness, or its economy, and about its humanity to dumb brutes, nor was there much doubt about its being more safe than horse power, as was stated as the opinion of different members here to-day, who claimed that for the six years we had been using steam power for threshing, with all the inexperience and imperfections and "old rattle traps," they had yet to learn of an accident in the county worth mentioning, while with horse power they had in their minds two or three serious accidents. The case would be different if we could use steam or not. But we had no choice in the matter; farmers are dependent upon each other at the time of threshing for help, and help could not now be procured for horse power. As far as experience went there were full as many ground up by horse powers, or chewed up by cylinders as were blown up by bursting flues and boilers.

If some people were constitutionally careful, they would be careful in everything as well as in one particular, and that argument would apply to all insurance; and if a man is constitutionally careful he will be careful to save one-half or one-third of his property as soon as the whole, as he well knows that he has at the best to stand a large proportion of his loss, even when insured at its whole value; therefore it would not be encouraging carelessness.

It would be useless to delay until the system of threshing became so perfected that there was no longer any danger, for it was in a time of danger that we desired protection. If there was a time when men desired protection it was when there was the most danger; and there probably was more danger while threshing than any other time in the year, either with steam or horse power, arising from carelessness, friction, tobacco pipes, lanterns, and an unusual amount of strange, inexperienced and indifferent help.

The officers of the insurance company desired to have this subject discussed by those interested and get an expression of their views, as well as to see what restriction they would recommend. Some of the restrictions recommended were: That it should not be so construed as to allow insuring all kinds of steam establishments. It should be a good engine, and accompanied with a Babcock extinguisher, and the engineer should never leave his engine alone under no circumstances when fired up, or run with the hood thrown back or open. But they believed the directors were competent men, and had given or would give the subject more time, thought and attention, than they had done, and were willing to leave the restrictions with them. As the power rested with the directors, they believed there was as much justice in their allowing the use of steam, under proper restrictions, as there was in the use of kerosene oil. They were allowed to place restrictions upon all other kinds of farm property, and if we trusted them in one case we could in the other.

The question was called for and carried by almost a two-thirds vote.

The subject for the next meeting is Fencing.

On motion of Mr. Lowe, the Lenawee Farmers' Club was invited to attend at our next meeting. The invitation expected by them to this club was received too late to take any action upon at our last meeting, and there seemed to be a division as to the time of holding their meeting. The secretary received no communication only through the Press.

On motion the meeting adjourned for two weeks, or to Feb. 19, at one o'clock P. M.

D. ALTHRASHA'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, which the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame, every muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external disease.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have not space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have not used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found in pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED!

PROPRIETOR OF THE

Arabian Medicines,

Celebrated throughout the World for their remarkable Cures.

Dr. Howe's Arabian Milk-Cure,
Dr. Howe's Arabian Tonic,
Dr. Howe's Arabian Liver Pills.

THE ONLY MEDICINE that has EVER BEEN KNOWN to POSITIVELY CURE CONSUMPTION.

TESTIMONY.

Of the Hon. Jos. E. Gray, Judge of the Superior Court, Chicago, Ill.

Chicago, Dec. 14, 1878.

Dr. S. D. HOWE:

DEAR SIR—Permit me to add my grateful testimony to the army of witnesses to the virtues of your justly celebrated Arabian remedies. For a long time my wife was seriously afflicted with hacking cough, oppressed breathing, soreness of the chest, and constant acute pain in the lower portion of the right lung and under the shoulder blade. Her sufferings were intense, and she became extremely nervous and prostrated. Her disease was pronounced consumption by the physicians of Chicago and other cities, whose prescriptions had been taken without benefit. When you visited Chicago in June, 1873, we called on you, having very little hope of deriving help from your treatment. We were inspired with hope by the skillful manner in which your thorough examination was conducted, and the satisfactory explanation with which you closed your diagnosis. My wife determined to take your medicines in accordance with your plan and practical directions. She began to use the Arabian Milk Cure and Arabian Tonic; their beneficial effect at once became manifest—the cough loosened and soon ceased, respiration became easy, the soreness of the chest was relieved and all pain removed, she began to gain in flesh and improve in strength and appearance. I fully believe that your medicines and skillful advice have saved the life of my wife. She unites with me in this grateful tribute to the merit of your remedies.

Very respectfully yours,
JOSEPH E. GRAY.

CLINTON.

Ask Frank Silvers if he likes "vale entines."

W. D. Van Tuyle spent last Sunday in town. He returned to his studies at Ann Arbor yesterday.

Frank Estabrook returned home last week from Chicago, where he has been at work at his trade for the past year or more.

The new Congregational parsonage is booming right along, but the Clinton opera house scheme must have suffered from mildew, or some other fatal blight.

The most extensive preparations are being made for the coming masquerade party. It will without doubt be the crowning social event of the season.

And now it comes to us upon good authority that we are soon to enjoy the divine presence of a lawyer. Hope this may prove true, as we've tried all other evangelizing methods and failed to make anything of the place worth mentioning, and now as a last resort, let's try a lawyer, and then see.

A Mrs. Hayes is visiting at D. H. Davis'. Not the President's wife.

Farmers complain of clover being lifted by the frost.

F. M. Snyder, the butcher, is to build a meat market in the near future, just north of the new printing office.

Railroad meeting to-night. Tecumseh must look a "ledle oud" or we may get the road yet. Let her boom. We have been in a dormant state for weeks; now we are coming out of the shell.

G. W. Zeigler has returned from Washington, where he has been to get a patent on a new motive power,—unique, unthought of before in mechanics.

Last Sunday a young lady came to the home of Frank Silvers. She has not acquired our language yet, but her actions indicate that she has come to stay, and Frank and wife have concluded to keep the little stranger.

Mrs. O. B. Schuyler, of Ann Arbor, gave us a temperance address on Sunday at Town Hall. Her convincing topic, beauty and purity of diction, and moving eloquence have not been equaled by any female speaker that we have engaged. Few men have surpassed her.

SPRINGVILLE.

Delos Lewis is erecting a new ice house.

A boy added to the census list at Wm. Shugars's.

Dr. Vaughn's old Dan horse fails to see any more.

Some ice houses are being filled in this vicinity.

Spring election begins to show itself. Better wait until the railroad question is settled.

Wm. Geddes is having stone drawn. It must be that William thinks of building a house; probably he is going to double up.

John Smith has sold his farm in Charlotte. John will probably come back to Cambridge if we get the railroad.

Asil Cure, of Rome, is going to build a fine residence on his farm in Cambridge. J. H. Smith has the contract.

The young folks of this vicinity are busy this week practicing for the concert Friday night.

The railroad is booming in Cambridge. Cambridge will secure their quota in time. At the regular meeting held last Tuesday a good feeling existed, and a number added from 25 to 50 per cent to their former subscriptions. New committees were appointed to help the old committees who have labored hard for the past month. At the close of the meeting Marshall Reed responded with a rousing railroad song, assisted on the chorus by others, to which two of our townsmen responded $25 a piece. So much for a song. The meeting adjourned until Saturday next, when it is expected the quota will be filled up for this township. Cambridge is waiting to hear from Tecumseh. Perhaps it would be well to have a song sung in Tecumseh.

LENAWEE JUNCTION.

Mrs. Boyce, of Grand Rapids, State Missionary of the W. C. T. U. delivered a lecture at the school house last Thursday evening, and at the village Friday evening.

The donation for Prof. McKeever, of Adrian College, and pastor of the Presbyterian church of Palmyra, which was to have been held on the 11th inst., was postponed one week, owing to the storm.

A union meeting of the two societies was held at the Presbyterian church on Sunday evening, and was addressed by Mrs. Marlatt in behalf of the Kansas refugees. A committee was appointed to solicit aid for the Nigs.

The station office has been moved to the east end of the platform, a baggage room has been finished off, and it is a decided improvement.

RIDGEWAY.

Lecture room of M. E. church calcimined. Frank Pocklington did it.

Irving S. Osborn has been moving a quantity of lumber from the mills below to Tecumseh for shipment.

The donation for Rev. Mr. Swank of the Christian Church last Thursday evening was well attended; cash receipts were $77.70.

The last Philo. was very lively,—some of the debaters got considerably warmed up,—noticably, Dr. Loree, who warmed up five times.

David Coryell has been laid up for a few days from injuries received by being thrown from his carriage, but is able to be out again.

Miss Nellie Reynolds, of Monroe, is visiting friends here.

Rev. Frazee, of Blissfield, preached here last Sunday morning and evening.

C. A. Sharp yet sojourneth in Ohio, and rumor says he contemplates going into business there. If that is so what had best be done about it?

Geo. Dibble has bought Wm. F. Pocklington's farm, so reported. A number of farms in Ridgeway have changed hands this winter. Look out for Western fever next spring.

RAISIN VALLEY.

We learn that Mr. Nelson Brown, a graduate of a theological seminary in New Jersey, is to fill the pulpit of the M. E. church regularly hereafter.

Almost every one has been complaining of hard colds and chills during the past week, many of the students being on the sick list.

Chester Baker is suffering with inflammatory rheumatism, at Mr. Birdsell's.

Mrs. Southworth, who has been seriously ill for the past week, is now on the gain.

Mr. Cyrus Crandall was obliged to close his school last week and come home. Sick with chills and fever the cause.

Mr. Rice's singing school has closed, after a very satisfactory term, although the class still meet for practice with Mr. Briggs as leader.

The Seminary has been favored this week with a large number of visitors.

MACON.

On the 8th inst. a temperance lecture was delivered by Rev. Mr. Burns.

The Reform Club continues to meet on alternate Friday evenings. The next meeting will be on the 27th inst.

The feed-mill of Messrs. Hendershot & Thomas, which has been in successful operation about two months seems to be well patronized, and the work done by the above mentioned firm is spoken of as entirely satisfactory.

This community has recently shown deep interest in the relief of the colored refugees to Kansas. The calls made in their behalf by Mrs. E. L. Comstock, Mrs. Laura Haviland, and others, have been warmly responded to. A large amount of clothing has been sent, and collections were taken up in the churches on Sunday last. The amount given by the M. E. church was announced to be three dollars; the Reformed church contributed six dollars and a half; while the Baptist church will probably bring its offerings to the same cause at its next meeting for public worship.

The death of two of the oldest settlers in this region occurred last week. On Tuesday Mr. Joelus Forbes was taken away. He had lived on his farm a few miles north of this place since 1837. On Thursday Mrs. Rachel Lindsley also entered into rest. She lived to be seventy-three years old, and belonged to the very earliest pioneers. The funeral ceremonies of both these highly respected citizens were largely attended.

Quarterly meeting at the M. E. church on the 22d.

There is to be a donation party on Friday evening of this week at the residence of Mr. John G. Boyd, in the southwestern part of this township, in behalf of the support of the Gospel in that neighborhood.

Rev. J. A. De Spelder is spending a part of this week in Detroit, attending the ministerial convention, which is in session at that place.

Our village school is reported to be under excellent supervision this winter. Nearly one hundred scholars are in attendance. Mr. Geo. Mitchell, of Saline, and Miss Parish, of Ann Arbor, are the teachers.

"THE DISADVANTAGES OF CITY BOYS," the personal statistics, gathered from a hundred prominent men of Springfield concerning their surroundings and habits of life during boyhood, was the subject of a lecture which Rev. Washington Gladden delivered before a crowded church, and afterward, at the request of the Mayor and others, in the Music Hall of his native city. Mr. Gladden says the statements produced more of a sensation than anything he has ever written, and he has been induced to embody the statistics and his logical deductions in an article, entitled, "The Disadvantages of City Boys," which will appear in the March St. Nicholas. It is said to be a paper of permanent value to old and young.

GLEANINGS FROM THE COUNTY PRESS.

Morenci has been having a temperance revival.

The Blissfield Band realized $20 out of their masquerade dance.

Last week's Blissfield Advance is filled with the coroner's inquest in the Mrs. Lathrop case. The inquest was to have been finished last Monday but was again postponed on account of the illness of Justice Clark.

Morenci Observer: Down in Ohio when a young man has taken a girl to a spelling-school sixteen times the law considers them engaged to be married, and she has a good case of breach of promise if he doesn't walk in.

Adrian Press: Detroit is pushing on commendably in the Butler railroad scheme, money is being pledged and it is possible that a railroad will yet be built. Will Adrian do something to secure the line? is now the proper thing to speculate upon.

Hudson Gazette: That new steamer for Devil's Lake is to be quite an immense affair, as we learn from the proprietor of Lake View. She will be fifty feet long and twenty feet beam, capable of carrying 300 passengers, and will make a run of five miles.—She will be built at Hudson.

Adrian Press: An agricultural paper asks, "Does it pay to winter turkeys?" Well, that depends very much upon circumstances. If your neighbor's corn crib is right handy, we should incline to the affirmative; but if your neighbor didn't have any corn crib, or any turkeys, we should deem the experiment hazardous.

Deerfield Record: There is a curious freak of nature at the residence of Mr. Petty, about five miles south-east of this place. It is in the shape of a four legged chicken, which is now one week old, and running around as if it were not different from the other chickens of the same brood. It uses only two of the four legs to walk with.

Adrian Times, Feb. 14: The Detroit papers to-day report some progress in the matter of raising subscriptions in aid of the Butler road. The committee seems to be at work quietly.—$3,000 they report raised yesterday.—We hope the project will catch its second wind soon, and begin to boom again. We are anxious to have our turn come.

Blissfield Advance: The lecture committee wish to say to the people of Blissfield and vicinity that the next lecture will be given by Prof. Swing, of Chicago, on Monday evening, Feb. 23d, and in order to put it within the reach of everybody to hear the two last and best lectures of the course, all who buy single admission tickets to Prof. Swing's lecture will be admitted to Burdette's lecture for 25 cts.

Morenci Observer: Last Tuesday some inexpressibly mean, black-hearted sneak sent through our village postoffice a number of anonymous letters to prominent gentlemen, reflecting in very scurrilous language on the character of some of the leading lady members of our churches. The sneak will probably be tracked to his hiding-place, and punished in an exemplary manner for violations of the U. S. postal laws. Fortunately he left some tracks by which a clue to his identity can be traced.

Deerfield Record: The dwelling of C. Y. Beach, situated one mile north-west of this place, caught fire, on Friday, the 6th, from a defective stove-pipe, and narrowly escaped being consigned to ashes. The fire had gained considerable headway before discovery, but was quickly extinguished by the soothing influence of a few pails of water. One side of the roof was about half burned up, and several rafters were burned off. If the discovery of the fire had been made 10 minutes later nothing could have saved it from destruction.

Hudson Post: The Farmers' Institute, which closed its session on Wednesday evening of this week, was in point of attendance, in the quality and number of essays, and in the interest manifested in agricultural pursuits, a perfect success. The first session, Tuesday evening, was not as largely attended as on Wednesday, but still a fair audience was at the Opera House. Wednesday our town was filled with people from the country, and each meeting was largely attended, but the culmination came in the evening, when in all probability, the largest crowd was at the Opera House that has been since it was completed. That the Farmers' Union is on a solid basis, and will be a permanent institution here, is a fixed fact, and we wish it all the success it is possible to attain.

...Y CIRCLE.

...L WHAT YOU SAY.

...g of a person's faults,
...ck's forget your own;
...ather those in houses glass,
...should never throw a stone.
...e we have nothing else to do,
But talk of those who sin,
Tis better we commence at home
And from that point begin.

We have no right to judge a man
Until he's fairly tried;
Should we not like his company,
We know the world is wide.
Some may have faults—and who have not?
The old as well as young;
We may, perhaps, for aught we know,
Have faults to their one.

I'll tell you of a better plan,
And find it works well
To try my own defects to cure,
Before of others I tell.
And though I sometimes hope to
No worse than such I know;
My own shortcomings and me let
The faults of others go.

Then let us all, when we commence
To slander friend or foe,
Think of the harm one word may do
To those we little know,
Remember curses, sometimes, like our chickens, "roost at home;"
Don't speak of other's faults until
We have none of our own.

A BRIDE AT EIGHTY-SEVEN.

In one of the last letters to the Philadelphia Times from Washington, appears a singular bit of society gossip, giving a little love romance which we extract entire:

A LOVE ROMANCE.

But apropos of weddings as an antithesis to the romances to which I do often allude in The Times, I must give as told me by herself the story of a bride of eighty-seven, who went from here to Philadelphia this week. Having, on Monday, first made the trip to Mount Vernon, which young people find fatiguing, she started at once to Philadelphia, arriving there at midnight, visited the venerable Lucretia Mott on Tuesday and then started for her home in Glastonbury, Ct., alone, as she came here. The Misses Foster, of Philadelphia, accompanied her from here to that city.

Accustomed as we are to associating a love romance with all its most interesting features with youth alone, it is a source not only of amazement but should be of pleasure also when it is proved that the finer feelings of human nature may endure in some instances as long as life itself, even when more than fourscore years have passed. The marriage of Mr. A. A. Parker, of New Hampshire, and Miss Julia Smith, of Glastonbury, Conn., which occurred only in April last, when both were in their eighty-eighth year, is an instance of this, the more remarkable because so far from violating common sense when they agreed to pass the remainder of their lives, however brief, together, they rather proved the possession of that uncommon gift in an unusual degree. While there is no touch of levity affected youthfulness or lack of the dignity becoming to her years in Mrs. Parker's recital of the circumstances which led to the marriage, no maiden under twenty ever had a more romantic courtship or enjoyed the narration of its incidents more.

She laughs gleefully when addressed as a bride and says she cannot realize that she is married and does not believe she ever will be used to being addressed by another name than that she bore so long. She intrudes the subject on no one, but when asked for the story tells it with a zest that to me is more fascinating than the style, as the narrative itself is fuller of surprising incidents than any novel I ever read. Her younger sister "Abby" died eighteen months ago, and Mr. A. A. Parker, of New Hampshire, reading in the newspapers of the death of one of the twain (whose persistent refusal to pay taxes because not allowed to vote had led to the annual sale of their cows) and the loneliness of the other—the last of five sisters, none of whom had married—sent her a volume of poems he had published, called "Poems at Four-Score." On the title page was written, "With the respect and sympathy of the author." Not having time in her grief at her sister's death to answer all the kind letters of condolence received, Miss Smith concluded to send her unknown friend, for she had not then even seen Mr. Parker, as an acknowledgement of his book, her own pamphlet which contains a full history of the cow and tax controversy, with the newspaper comments thereon. This little lady has a keen sense of humor and can laugh at a joke even when against herself. The pamphlet also had an advertisement of Miss Smith's translation of the Bible which she made unaided from the original Hebrew, Latin and Greek versions after she was fifty years old and which those best acquainted with those tongues commend highly. Mr. Parker sent to the publishers in Hartford for a copy of this Bible, and on perusing it was impelled to write to the translator to ask questions as to why she had varied from the King James edition.—Thus began their correspondence in August, 1878, and the following month Mr. Parker wrote that he considered the Bible a volume of too great importance to be discussed only on paper and requested an interview, which was granted.

HOW IT CAME ABOUT.

His first visit proved a pleasant one, "but," says she who is now his wife, "he never thought he would come again, and he has always told me the truth." But he kept up the correspondence after returning home and soon hinted at his hope of winning her for his wife. This, she says, with emphasis, grieved her, as she did not then think she would be willing to marry, so she wrote to him saying she had enjoyed the correspondence so much, "for," says she, with enthusiasm, "he really writes a beautiful letter," that she felt very sorry to say that "after his last letter it must end." He, however, did not take "no" for an answer and continued writing, made her a second and then a third visit, the latter in April, 1879. "I don't believe," says Mrs. Parker, "we should ever have been married, but the last time he came he couldn't get away for three or four days, because there was a heavy rain that washed away all the bridges and overflowed the roads" (her home is in the country), "and we were shut up together in the house and learned to know we had much the same habits and tastes. I had always said I never would marry a man who used strong drinks at all, or had a habit of taking opiates, or used tobacco, and I found that he didn't take any of those, and then I agreed to marry him. But I told him I didn't believe I should ever be able to stand up and be married there in my house where I had lived single so long and I thought we had better meet in New York and be married there." So the romance of an elopement was suggested but not carried out, for later the bride-elect admitted that if she could be married without any fuss or premeditation she would, and Mr. Parker, who seems to have well understood woman's ways and to have been very diplomatic in affaires du cœur, quietly went into town the first day the flood left the highways clear, arranged with the minister, took out a license and notified Miss Smith only a few hours before the ceremony took place when it would be. She then had a fire made in the best parlor and the marriage was solemnized in the presence of only two witnesses, the next neighbor and a boy employed about the place. The latter, as soon as it was over, hastened to spread the news, only to be doubted by every one he told. This part of the story Mrs. Parker tells with the greatest relish, and says, merrily, she has promised her friends never to astonish them so much again. She says: "Now isn't it funny for a woman to marry for the first time at eighty-seven?" and laughs at the joke of it. Her house is one hundred and forty years old, and was purchased by her father from its first owner, who was married there one hundred and one years before her wedding. No other marriages have ever occurred therein. Mrs. Parker says she and her husband thought, as both were alone, he having been for three years a widower and his four children being married and settled apart from him, and she being the last of her own family, they might as well keep each other company, especially as their tastes were so congenial, both being fond of study and writing.

ROMANCE AT FOUR-SCORE.

It is because I can see the force of this reasoning and the natural manner in which it all came about that I maintain it was an arrangement in which common sense had much to do. But could any boy and girl begin a correspondence in a more romantic way than by sending and acknowledging the receipt of a volume of poems? The lady, too, being finally won to consent to marriage when the elements combined with her suitor as a final argument against her living, was to the last degree romantic. No sordid motive animated either of the aged pair, and since their marriage she says neither has asked the other for money, but the husband purchases everything necessary for the household, and the only fault she finds is that he purchases more provisions than they can possibly consume. So far, too, from desiring him to pay the taxes she has so long declined to pay, she contends, that the law of Connecticut which compels a man to pay his wife's taxes should be repealed. But she makes a point in favor of suffrage for women by relating how differently a voter is treated by a tax collector from a disfranchised citizen. She says when she used to ask the collector what was the amount of the tax bill and costs he would reply, "I'll tell you when I'm ready," but when her husband asked the same question last year he was promptly told, and, knowing the amount in advance it was necessary to sell and buy in only one cow instead of imposing upon all the poor animals the fatigue of being driven from the farm to the town. Mrs. Parker quite exults in her husband's adroit management of the business.

Her especial reason for coming here was to attend the wedding of Miss Solomons and Mr. Pixotte, on the evening of the 21st, and she also was present at the sessions of the convention of the National Women's Suffrage Association, but the invitation to the wedding was what decided her to come at that time. She greatly regretted that her husband could not come with her, and said, with as much enjoyment of the sense of being protected as if she had not passed from youth to old age independent of a man's guardianship: "He" (she uses the New Englandism of always referring to her husband as "he," as if there were but one in the world) "always knows how to arrange everything so nicely and take care of everything so well that I missed him in coming here, though I was not afraid to travel alone." Her quaint, modest, artless manner of telling her story and her enjoyment in praising her husband's mental gifts, he also being literary, are inimitable.

MISS GRUNDY.

DOING A FAVOR.

Early yesterday morning a poorly-dressed and seedy-looking person about fifty years old entered the Post-office and proceeded to warm his hands at one of the registers. He made no enquiries about mail, and after he had been loafing around for two hours a policeman got his eye on him and asked:

"Say, old man, have you any business here?"

"Well, no," was the reply.

"Any work to do?"

"No. I kinder thought I'd lay off this winter."

"Any friends here?"

"No."

"I think you are a vagrant," continued the officer as he took another look at him.

"Mebbe I am," sighed the old man.

"And I think I'll take you down."

"Well, I'll go along."

The officer escorted him down to the station house, registered his name, and then proceeded to search his pockets. Each one yielded out a wad of money, making a total of $1,600.

"Why didn't you tell me you had this money?" demanded the policeman.

"Why didn't you ask me?"

"Didn't I say I took you for a vagrant, and you didn't deny it either?"

"Well, I didn't know anything about your city laws," quietly replied the old man. "I've got two married daughters, and I came in to buy each of 'em a new piano for New Year's, but if it's ag'in any of your laws I'll take the next train for home. I'm getting purty old, and I don't want no fuss with anybody."

"Well, you might have saved yourself all this trouble," said the officer as he escorted him to the street.

"Don't mention it," was the answer. "If I took any trouble on your account it's all right and you needn't thank me. I'm always willing to oblige anybody who can appreciate it. Purty cold day, isn't it?"—Detroit Free Press.

BARNUM'S GREEK.

Barnum's tattooed Greek sailor is on exhibition in Albany, and the advertisement says, "He has upon his body seven million punctures, and it was all done by a female savage. The poor man lost a drop of blood and shed a tear for every puncture, and was the only one of twenty-four who survived the operation. The woman who did the tattooing worked six hours a day for ninety days before the task was completed." A mathematician of the Albany Express figures as follows: "The woman must have given him three and a half punctures a second. Then if he lost one drop of blood with every puncture, he lost, estimating the usual number of drops to a pint, and taking a pint to a pound, 5,833 pounds; or, to put it differently, just 889 gallons of blood, or a trifle over 20 barrels during ninety days.—Tears don't weigh as much as blood, so bunching the two together the gentleman from Albania must have lost about 5½ tons of those fluids within three months." Barnum's Agent retorts that if the Greek had not been a wonderful man he should not have been exhibited.

The Wagaris, of India, are distinguished for truthfulness, and apparently great kindness for the weaker sex. A woman of the Wagari tribe, it is said, is not required to labor, and she possesses, moreover, the curious right, by long established usage, of choosing a man for her husband. The choice is exercised by her in a novel manner. She sends a hairpin to the man on whom she has set her affections, with a request that he will pin a handkerchief to his cap. Should he reciprocate her attachment he is only too pleased to carry out her wishes, and when doing so names the woman who owns the pin, when she is obliged to marry forthwith.

The population of Nebraska is now about 500,000. It produced of grain last year about 20,000,000 bushels, with an increase of live stock over any former year of about 60 per cent. Omaha its principal city, erected last year in round numbers, 1,000 new buildings, and its business transactions reached the large sum of $200,000,000.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

AMERICAN GIRLS.

In her lecture on "Home Life," Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton strongly condemns the practice, still too widely prevalent, of cramping the waists and feet of our growing up young girls with tight stays and close fitting shoes. "In looking at the statuary of the Old World," she says, "one cannot help but wonder where American girls get their forms. We laugh at the Chinese for putting their feet in iron shoes, but how absurd our fashion is of lacing our waists so tight that we can hardly draw a free breath! School girls fourteen years old are happy when they wear their hair streaming down their backs, and go romping about in loose fitting and short dresses; but their happiness ceases when the dressmaker comes around and tells her that it is time that she was beginning to form her waist, and the process begins, until the poor creature's ribs are distorted, when she is ready for fashionable society. If we could only induce our girls to dress properly and leave their ribs in their normal condition, and wear shoes that would allow them to place their feet firmly upon the green sward, they would eventually supersede boys. Health is the normal condition for all women; there is no such thing as natural diseases. We have educated our people to have some respect for moral laws, but in doing so, have neglected our physical laws. No one seems to be ashamed of being ill, but we should be. The sin is equally great when we violate physical laws as other moral laws are disregarded, and the time will soon come when nerves shall be superseded by muscle. But despite our weakness, we have greater beauty, intellect and more power than any other nation on the globe.

"There was a time when women thought it fashionable to faint, and it was regarded by men as a mark of delicacy. They soon grew tired, however, of running for smelling bottles and holding fainting women, so they began to ridicule the absurd habit in the press, and the result is that now you hear of very few fainting women. The guns that men have turned upon strong-minded women for the past thirty years, they should now turn upon weak-minded women."

BENZINE FOR MOTHS.

Says the American Cabinet-Maker and Upholsterer: A sort of trade secret among upholsterers, it is said, is this recipe for ridding furniture of moths: A set of furniture that seemed to be alive with the larvæ, and from which hundreds of these pests had been picked and brushed, was set into a room by itself. Three gallons of benzine had been purchased at thirty cents a gallon, retail. Using a small-watering-pot, with a fine rose sprinkler, the whole of the upholstery was saturated through and through with the benzine. The result was, every moth, larva and egg was killed. The benzine dried out in a very few hours, and the entire odor disappeared in three or four days. Not the slightest harm happened to the varnish, or fabric, or wood, or hair stuffing. That was months ago, and not a sign of a moth has since appeared. The carpets were also well sprinkled all around the sides of the room with equally good effect. For furs, flannels, indeed all woolen things containing moths, benzine is most valuable. Put them in a box, sprinkle them with benzine, close the box tightly, and in a day or two the pests will be exterminated, and the benzine will all evaporate on opening. In using benzine, great care should be taken that no fire is near by, as the stuff, in fluid or vapor form is very inflammable.

BAKED FISH.—Make a dressing of bread crumbs and a little pork chopped fine, and season with pepper, salt and a little butter. Fill your dish with the mixture, sew it up, dredge on a little flour, and after laying it in a dripping pan, cover it with very thin slices of salt pork. A four pound fish will take from thirty to forty minutes to bake.

BEEF LOAF.—Chop two pounds of beef, and three large slices of salt pork fine; add four well beaten eggs half a cup of butter, the inside of a medium sized loaf of bread, and season with salt, pepper and spices if you like.—Form into a loaf, cover with cracker crumbs, and bake an hour and a half. If it does not stay in good shape add rolled cracker crumbs until it will.

A precious gem is "Seller's Cough Syrup"—has never been known to fail in curing colds, coughs, and whooping cough. Price 25c.

CAFE AU LAIT.—Make your coffee as usual, except leaving out half the water, add same quantity of unskimmed milk and let it boil. Very nice for after dinner coffee.

It has wonderful power on Bowels, Liver and Kidneys! What? Kidney-Wort, try it.

YOU SHOULD TAKE IT.

In Point of Excellence It is Unsurpassed, and Every Family Will Appreciate it and Enjoy Its Perusal.

Every man should make his home as comfortable and attractive as possible.

A most essential requisite to that end is a good newspaper. The perusal of such a newspaper not only instills in the rising generation a love of home but is a constant incentive to improvement. Simply as an educator, and aside from all other considerations, no parent should forego taking into his family THE DETROIT FREE PRESS.

For the year 1880 we have to offer the standard features which have made THE FREE PRESS the most popular journal in the world, and with such additions as will prove of special interest to Michigan readers.

Addressing more particularly the farmer, we take extreme pains to procure complete and accurate market reports. They embrace farm products of every character, including live stock. The quotations, corrected to the day of publication, from all the leading cities, as well as those of Detroit, are given each week.

A carefully organized system of regular correspondence throughout Michigan will give the readers early and complete intelligence of all happenings in the State.

At this point we wish to remind readers that the best and fullest reports as well as the earliest news of all important affairs, whether happening in Michigan or elsewhere, will be found in THE FREE PRESS. We might refer to the two most recent and terrible disasters in Michigan—the Adrian grand stand horror and the Jackson railroad accident—as examples, reinforced on frequent occasions by accounts of great public events which THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS has laid before its readers in advance of its contemporaries.

No newspaper has brighter or more intelligent editorial comments on the leading topics of the day.

None surpass it in candor; none equal it in literary merit; none approach it in spice, sparkle and vivacity.

Its correspondence by its superior excellence, has attracted great attention, and in this especial department The Free Press is acknowledged to stand at the very front.

Readers of The Free Press will receive through its columns an intelligible idea of new books of merit as they are from time to time published. Liberal extracts and discriminating reviews appear every week.

Attention is given to historical topics, and articles having special reference to our own State are in preparation.

"THE HOUSEHOLD."

Every issue of THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS is accompanied by "The Household," a supplement devoted to social and domestic topics, flower culture, fancy work, toilet and cooking recipes and household matters generally. It is furnished without extra charge, and every purchaser or subscriber to The Weekly Free Press is entitled to receive a copy.

To sum up, all must conclude that The Weekly Free Press and The Household—a supplement which accompanies every issue—though furnished together for $1.50 a year, compare in the amount and excellence of contents with the best of the four dollar magazines.

The Weekly Free Press and "The Household" together are furnished at $1.50 a year.

Liberal premiums, embracing yearly subscriptions to the various magazines, etc., are given for clubs. Address letters to

Montreal Heard From.

R. L. Mosely, of Montreal, Canada, certified Sept. 27, 1879 that he had suffered terribly from dyspepsia, and was completely cured by taking Warner's Safe Bitters. He says: "My appetite is good, and I suffer no inconvenience from eating hearty meals." These Bitters are also a specific for all skin diseases.

"If you marry Grace," exclaimed an irate father to his son, "I will cut you off without a cent, and you won't have as much as a piece of pork to boil in the pot." "Well," replied the young man, "Grace before meat," and he immediately went in search of a minister.

HOT AND COOL.

Among the railway travellers eating dinner at a hotel in Baltimore, the other day, was a fellow from Fayette, Ohio, who swallowed meat, potatoes, and bread as if he had been a week without eating.

A second cup of coffee was brought to him, and in his hurry he picked it up and took a large swallow. It was considerably hotter than pepper, and in his excitement he opened his mouth and shot the liquid across the table against a young man's shirt bosom.

"Gosh—woop—hot—beg pardon—and blazes!" he exclaimed, reaching after water.

"You are a hog, sir!" replied the young man, "a regular hog!"

"I am, eh!"

"Yes, sir."

"And I've got bristles?"

"Yes, you have."

"And I grunt?"

"Yes."

"Stranger," said the Ohio man, as he reached across the table after another slap-jack, "stranger, I'm not a hog—I'm only a politician, bound for Washington.

Poverty and Suffering.

"I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did them no good.—I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well and none of us have seen a sick day since, and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost—I know it.

My good woman why are you so out of sorts, never able to tell folks that you are well? Ten to one it's all caused in the first place by habitual constipation, which has no doubt finally caused deranged Kidneys and Liver. The sure cure for Constipation is the celebrated Kidney-Wort. THE READY FAMILY SOAP MAKER:

LEWIS' LYE

98 PER CENT. PURE.
(Patented.)
FINELY POWDERED.
HIGHLY PERFUMED.

The strongest and purest Lye made. Will make 12 pounds of the best Perfumed Hard Soap in 20 minutes without boiling.

The best water-softener made.

The best disinfectant.

The following are some of the advantages gained by using Lewis' 98 Per Cent. Powdered Lye:

First. It is packed in an iron can with a lift or removable lid, easily taken off and leaving the contents exposed, thereby saving the trouble, annoyance, and danger (from flying particles), as with other Lyes, which, being sold in tin cans, must be broken with a hammer to get the Lye out.

Second. It being a fine powder, you can remove the lid and pour out all the contents, being always ready for use.

Third. A teaspoonful or more can be used, as in water-softening, scrubbing, etc., and the lid returned to the can, and thereby save the balance of contents. With other Lyes all must be dissolved at once and used in a short time, or the strength is gone.

Fourth. Absolute purity. Free from all adulterations.

Fifth. The best Soap can be made in from ten to twenty minutes with this Lye.

Sixth. No failure is possible in making Soap with this Lye when the simple directions given are followed.

Seventh. One can of this Powdered Lye is equal to twenty pounds of Sal Soda or Washing Soda.

Eighth. One can of this Lye will saponify one pound more of grease than any other Concentrated Lye, Ball Potash, or Saponifier.

Ninth. This Lye is 3 per cent stronger than any other Lye or Potash.

Tenth. One to two teaspoonfuls will soften a tub of the hardest water.

Eleventh. One teaspoonful will thoroughly cleanse Sinks, Drains, or Closets.

Invaluable for killing Roaches, Mice, Rats, etc.

The best article for washing Trees.

TECUMSEH, MICH., FEB. 19, 1880.

THE RAILROAD OUTLOOK.

The railroad outlook remains substantially as it was last week. Nothing has occurred to change the opinion we expressed then that the Toledo and Milwaukee road can be secured on the Tecumseh and Adrian line, provided the towns on the line do their duty and raise their quotas. The latest news received from Mr. Latcha states that Marshall has her quota entirely pledged. Homer has a large proportion of hers; Addison and Cambridge have their quotas entire, and the towns between Addison and Homer are well under way. Since last Thursday our committee have corresponded with a few of the prominent business men of Toledo to ascertain what Toledo was doing and how they regarded the Tecumseh route. Letters have been already received from Hon. H. S. Wallbridge, and V. H. Ketcham, President of the First National bank, which are very emphatic in their statements in regard to the benefits of this line, and the certainty of its being built. Mr. Wallbridge says:

I have taken much interest in the Milwaukee R. R. route and it has been talked much among our people, who deem it one of the most important lines for our city now pointing toward us. Several of our monied men have subscribed and others will. We shall swell the amount to $25,000 this week, and before the month is out to $50,000. Our people are favorably disposed towards the road through your city and it will be built by some one before [illegible] to have a route to Toledo long [illegible].

Mr. Ketcham says our citizens are disposed to do their full share to secure this road. The road is of great importance to our city as well as yours, and we should neither of us leave a stone unturned until we have secured it. Don't let this opportunity pass for so valuable an improvement to both country and town. We must have it.

These letters indicate more than any newspaper article can do the temper of the leading business men of Toledo. It must also be remembered that four new railroad projects are now asking local aid at Toledo, and hence it is not likely that any big newspaper boom will be gotten up in favor of any particular line. The work in Toledo is being done in a quiet way by canvassing committees but it will be accomplished in good time nevertheless.

A letter received yesterday from the Addison committee shows that the work is progressing rapidly and successfully in that section and west of them to Homer. The Tecumseh canvassing committee have been at work this week and they are meeting with very gratifying success. $1,800 in notes were taken last Tuesday and nearly as much more yesterday. The committee are procuring notes from persons in the village who have formerly stood aloof from the enterprise, and it is having an admirable effect. The property holders of the village are now subscribing liberally, and by next Saturday night the quota of Tecumseh will be well in hand.

The farmers in this vicinity have thus far been rather backward in subscribing, and they should now understand that the success or failure of the enterprise now rests upon their shoulders. The farmers of Franklin, Tecumseh, Raisin and Ridgeway now hold the decision of this question in their own hands. A fair amount of help from the farmers of these towns will absolutely insure the success of the enterprise.

But if they fail to come to time, our citizens may as well make up their minds to lose the road. The following item from the Adrian Times is very significant. After giving an extract from a Detroit paper about the Butler road, it comments thereon in these words:

The remark of our Detroit contemporary in regard to danger by machinations of rivals ought to be heeded. The Toledo & Milwaukee project, which will never be built, except Toledo subscribes liberally in aid, is being manipulated by shrewd men, who are playing one section of this county against the other, getting each to subscribe as much as possible, with an idea, it is said, of finally making Adrian a proposition, which if she accepts, will secure her the road. A few days ago, when the Detroit project looked very encourageing, they were at work north of us. Now it is said they are looking this way again. Adrian wants a competing road; she decidedly prefers the Detroit project. But if this is shown to be impossible, through Detroit's parsimony, we shall make an effort to secure the other. This would bind us still closer to Toledo, and remove us correspondingly further from Detroit. But the decision rests with the latter city, and she ought to decide soon. It looks contemptible that the chief commercial city of the state should dawdle along over a subscription which is really paltry when the wealth of the city and the benefits to be derived are taken into account.

This language clearly shows that Adrian would be very glad of an opportunity to aid for this road, for even if the Butler road should be built, which never will be built, unless Detroit comes down with her $200,000, Adrian would be very greatly assisted by this road also. The Brooklyn and Clinton line are quietly at work also. There was a meeting in Clinton last evening and a joint meeting will be held in Brooklyn next week, and all this work is being done in anticipation that the Tecumseh line will fail, and they will then have a chance to make an even race for the road. We do not believe that the property holders of the village who have not yet subscribed, and the farmers in this section will allow such an opportunity to slip through their fingers.

Mr. Latcha will not hold his present proposition open all summer. The limit will expire absolutely the last of next week and if the towns upon this line are not prepared by that time with their quotas, the road will certainly go elsewhere. This is the "plain English" of the matter and our people may as well understand it.

SENSIBLE FARMERS.

At the last meeting of the Benawee County farmers club the following resolutions were introduced and passed without opposition:

WHEREAS, There is a prospect of a railroad being built from Detroit to Butler Ind., and

WHEREAS, We members of the Lenawee County farmers' club, think such a road building line would be of great benefit to the farmers and others in this vicinity: therefore,

Resolved, That this club do recommend the building of such road, and will use our influence in such manner as will forward and secure its early completion.

Now these farmers appreciate the situation. A line of road from Detroit to Butler would give them additional shipping facilities, which would reduce their freight rates and increase the price of their grain and other produce. But if a road to Detroit would have that effect how much more would the Toledo & Milwaukee road produce such a result? The latter road would be under the control of the Pennsylvania Central and would give us the sharpest competing rates not only to Toledo but also to Philadelphia, New York and Baltimore, the seaports from which their grain finds its way across the Atlantic. Some of the farmers in this vicinity seem to be very slow in seeing their own interests.

TARIFF REFORM.

An effort is making by the newspaper press to secure the modification of the present tariff, so far as it levies duties on the raw material and chemicals used in the manufacture of print paper. It is proposed to place wood and straw pulp and the chemicals employed in the manufacture of paper on the free list and to reduce the duty on print paper at least to five per cent. ad valorum. It is now twenty per cent. in addition to freight and other charges. A bill combining these objects has been introduced in Congress and it will undoubtedly become a law during the present session if the press of the country act together promptly in urging upon Congress its importance and necessity. If the bill should be passed it will place the business of paper-making on a footing that will enable it successfully to defy foreign competition, and at the same time protect publishers against destructive prices. It will relieve both interests of existing abnormal burdens, and liberate the public from an odious tax on knowledge.

REAL ESTATE SALES.

The revival in business has finally effected real estate, and the prices of real property are tending upward, as in other branches of industry. In fact there never has been a better time, during the past twenty years, to purchase or sell real estate than now. Persons who have farms or village property which they desire to sell are very likely to find a purchaser by letting their wants be known; persons who wish to invest in real estate can find plenty of opportunities to buy desirable property at reasonable prices and on favorable terms. We call the attention of our readers to our "Real Estate for Sale" notices to be found in another column. There are several chances here for spendid bargains, which buyers would do well to avail themselves of. Those having property to sell will find that a notice in this column will be an excellent investment for them.

AMONG OUR EXCHANGES.

That's a Fact.

New York Tribune.—Tilden isn't half as sick as Tammany will feel when he is nominated.

Why Don't They?

New York Tribune.—Why don't the boomers who are anxious for a coalition try a turnabout and make it Blaine and Grant? That would remove the third term objection and recognize the popular Republican demand at the same time.

Against a Second Term.

Milwaukee News.—The last reason advanced why Mr. Tilden should not be the Democratic nominee this year is that of the scrupulous purist who insists that no President should be his own successor—that no man should be elected to the Presidency a second time.

Crippled Soldiers and Sherman.

Washington Post.—General Sherman states a fact when he says there is no other nation on earth so liberal to its crippled soldiers as the United States. It is also a fact that General Sherman's pay is equal to the full pensions of about one hundred and forty soldiers of the Republic. That is rather liberal, too.

Uncle Sammy's Position.

Cincinnati Enquirer.—Mr. Tilden does not "stay dead." Conflicting announcements that he is and is not a candidate for President come about every alternate day with the regularity of "shakes" in chills and fever.—Mr. Tilden occupies a position in relation to the Presidential candidacy which makes it important to him not to be lost sight of.

Acts on Them Like an Iceberg.

Detroit Evening News.—Some business men have organized a Sherman club in New York. It seems to be as effective an engine of political work as the "mass" meeting held the other night at Columbus, O., at which the capital of Sherman's own state turned out but 500 men and boys. Sherman appears strongest where he makes no attempt to show his strength. When he tries to stir up the masses he acts upon them like an iceberg.

John Kelly Has His Hands Full.

Philadelphia Times.—An esteemed Southern contemporary is advising John Kelly to "send Conkling delegates to the Chicago Convention." It will shortly begin to appear to the impartial observer that John Kelly is being crowded with too much responsibility. At present it looks as if he would have all he can do to secure a Conkling delegation to the Democratic National Convention and find seats for it when it gets there.

How Illinois Stands.

Adrian Times.—If the Chicago Times canvass be at all reliable, and certainly it is one of the fullest, most complete of the kind yet made, the Republicans of Illinois are decidedly favorable to Blaine as a Presidential candidate. Grant is the second and Washburne third choice. The assertion is made that Grant's friends are saying that inasmuch as other states are likely to instruct for Grant, it won't do for Illinois, his own state, to go back on him.

Grant Stock Declining.

New York Tribune.—News received in Washington from Minnesota gives assurance that Blaine is gaining friends so rapidly that he is now almost certain to have the ten delegates to Chicago vote as a unit for him.—General Grant has been very strong in the State, but since the Harrisburg Convention he is said to have lost ground steadily and rapidly. Reports from the Pacific States confirm those previously received from there and show that Blaine is likely to have the solid vote of the whole Slope.

Take off the Duty on Paper.

Detroit Free Press.—Representative Fort's bill has brought a paper-maker's lobby to Washington in the hopes of defeating it. Their argument seems to be that the advanced price of paper is not the result of the tariff and proceeding as it does from other causes, cannot be much affected by a repeal of the duties. But they are just as active and vigorous and earnest in opposing the repeal as if the tariff actually did raise the price of paper. Let it be taken off, therefore, and then we shall know who was right.

The Independent Voter.

New York Sun.—The independent voters, who stand between the party extremes and hold the balance of power, ask no favor from either side.—They want good government, peace all over the Union, fraternal friendship between the sections, and prosperous development of the untold resources of the country. They are watching with interest the movements of the two machines, and waiting to see if the Democrats will have sense enough to give them the opportunity to turn the Republicans out of office, and thus to end a career of corruption and plunder in the administration of the Government. There has been no such chance for twenty years, and if discarded now, the Democracy may as well hang their harp on the willow.

W. BRADFORD WILLIAMS will take the place of John R. Clark on the benefit program to-morrow evening, as Mr. Clark has been called elsewhere.

Adrian Times: The Toledo Sunday Journal quotes Gov. Croswell as saying that he would never marry a widow. We don't believe any such thing.

There will be a railroad meeting at Tuttle's Hall, in Franklin, next Monday afternoon, at two o'clock. The farmers of Franklin are invited to turn out.

CLINTON has again opened up the ball on the Toledo & Milwaukee road in anticipation that Tecumseh will fail in raising her quota. Adrian is also looking in the same direction.

BERT TEMPLE is making a neat receptacle for tongs and shovels out of tile. He has two sizes which he sells at 20 and 25 cents each. He keeps a supply on hand at S. W. Temple's lumber office.

Morenci Observer: There has been three masquerades in Lenawee county its four days, and another one occurs this week. Some people are never so happy as when they lose their identity.

SHERMAN & PUTNAM know how to make hobby brooms. We have one of their brooms on exhibition at our office and it is certainly the nicest house broom that ever found its way into our domicil.

A COUPLE of gas light fixtures are being placed in position over the front entrance of the Opera House for use on dark evenings. A little more light in that direction will be a decided improvement.

THE North American Review for March will contain articles by ex-Judge Jere. S. Black and the Hon. E. W. Stoughton on the third term question, and a paper on our political dangers by Prof. Simon Newcomb.

MR. O. W. BEAN, proprietor of the Tecumseh tannery is driving a good business now. He has one team on the road taking orders and delivering, in addition to the orders which are filled direct from the tannery here at home.

ANDREW J. SINK, of Rome, N. Y., died on Sunday last. He is a brother of W. H. Sink of this village, and was formerly proprietor of the American House in Toledo. W. H. Sink left here on Monday to attend his brother's funeral, and will be gone till the last of this week.

THE Ladies Mite Society of South Macon will have a neck tie social at Grange Hall, Wednesday eve. Feb. 25th, 7 P. M. All are invited, and a good time may be expected. Those that are acquainted with the suppers gotten up by the ladies of South Macon will not stay at home.

CAN it be possible that Thomas Jefferson Ludlow has finally been suppressed? A late Adrian Times has this item, which squints strongly in that direction:

"Charley," the old horse of Mr. D. C. Clark, has been well cared for in his old age by Mr. J. R. Clark. The animal died on Sunday. Mr. C. was very reticent about the death, and showed great anxiety to have the remains buried. He claims to have feared an attempt to hold an inquest.

THE case of Thomas Boyd vs. Merritt E. Conklin et al. came on for trial yesterday in the Circuit Court.

JEHIEL DAVIDSON has on exhibition a banana blossom, which was sent to him by Nehemiah Sutton, all the way from Florida.

JUDGE COOLEY, who is holding the present term of Court, says he came there to work, and that the attorneys must have their cases ready.

THE Adrian Times has just completed and published a business directory containing all the leading business houses of that city. It is a very cheap and also an attractive method of advertising. The Times claims that but one paper in the state has published a more complete directory.

WEBB FRAZER, of this village, has taken the agency for the Phenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, N. Y. The Phenix is one of the best companies doing business in the State, and the farm department especially presents to the farmers an opportunity to procure first-class insurance at reasonable rates.

NEWS from Wm. Hayden who, with his wife has been visiting friends in Ohio for some days past, states that he is convalescent, but that Mrs. Hayden is still very sick and unable to sit up at all. They have been seriously afflicted, having gone down there to attend at the sick bed of Mrs. Hayden's brother.

THE railroad boom has taken another fresh start, and is now handsomely trotting down the homestretch. The laggards have all been sent to the rear, the blowing has all been done, and this week we are doing some heavy work. Our committees are taking notes this week, and the notes are what do the business.

THE newly elected Directors of the County Agricultural Society met at the parlors of the Central Hotel at Adrian last Friday afternoon, and after transacting some other business pertaining to the fair for 1880, elected the following named Directors, for the purpose of acting with the President and Secretary as an Ex. Committee: J. R. Bennett, James Cook, Jay Hoag, Merritt Cogswell, M. T. Cole.

THE organ concert at the Presbyterian church last Friday evening was well attended and was a very fine performance. The program consisted of organ selections by Mr. Sprague, and several choruses and songs by the members of the church choir.—We understand that a sufficient amount has been pledged by subscription to insure the purchase of the organ. It is a fine toned instrument and is far superior to any other church organ in this village.

M. C. WOOD, Pres.

THE entertainment given at the Opera House last Thursday evening by the ladies of the Presbyterian Society was superior to the general run of amateur performances. It consisted of instrumental and vocal music and tableaux. The latter were all good and some of them extra. In addition to the musical talent belonging to the church here they were ably assisted by Mrs. Mumford and Mrs. Probart. It seemed like old times to hear their musical voices once more, and they never acquitted themselves better before a Tecumseh audience than in the solos which they sang last Thursday evening. The entertainment was not only an artistic but also a financial success.

THE enumerators, whose duty it will be to collect the sensus statistics, will have the strong arm of the law to back them up in their efforts to obtain the requisite information, and parties who fail to answer their questions will do so at their peril. The law says that all persons above the age of twenty-one years, who shall refuse to furnish the information required by the enumerators, shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding $100. Officials of private corporations who shall refuse to answer the questions propounded and afford the census-taker the facilities for obtaining the requisite statistics shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $10,000.

DELOS LE BARON of Toledo, was in town yesterday.

A Card.

A report has been circulated here that I did not wish regular boarders in my new quarters, Sink's Hotel, and that I would raise the price of board. I wish to state that this report is utterly false. I shall be prepared to accommodate regular boarders in the new Hotel the same as formerly at the Pioneer House, and I shall conduct the Hotel business on the same general plan as heretofore.

W. H. SINK.

Union Temperance Social.

The regular social by the ladies of the W. C. T. U. and the Reform Club will be held on Monday evening next at the club room. We have made arrangements for a full and interesting program that will not fail to please you all. Our socials have not been as well attended as we desire them to be, and we are making an extra effort this week to have a good time, and we earnestly invite all friends of the temperance cause to come out and hear what we have to present to you. Admission free.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

ATTENTION COMPANY.

HEADQUARTERS CO. C.
1st. REG'T M. S. T.
TECUMSEH, Feb. 18, 1880.

General Order No. 1.

In accordance with Gen. Order No. 1 Regimental Headquarters, this company will parade in the State uniform under arms at the Company's armory on Monday, Feb. 23rd., 1880 at 7:30 P. M. Every member will be expected to report for duty at that hour.

R. B. HOUSE,
Commanding Co. C.

This parade is obligatory upon the company, as all the State troops are required by law to hold a parade on Washington's birthday. As that anniversary falls on Sunday this year the parade will be held on Monday. After the drill and inspection next Monday evening the boys will partake of a lunch, the members of the company donating the provisions therefor. Spectators will find free seats in the gallery, and we have no doubt that many will avail themselves of this opportunity of witnessing a full dress parade.

LET US GO TO WORK.

TECUMSEH, Feb. 19, 1880.

EDITOR HERALD:—The question of a new railroad is now narrowed down to one of prompt and effective work. No more yawning or hesitation can be indulged in with any hope of success. Our neighbors on either side are active and wide awake, and will certainly be prompt to take advantage of any lack of interest or any suspension of work on our part. It behooves us, therefore, to come to the front at once, and not only talk but do. Every one concedes the great advantage of the road. We all agree that with it must come increase of population, increase of business and renewed prosperity. It can scarcely be doubted that from the day the road is completed to Tecumseh, every farm within five miles of this place will be enhanced in value at least five dollars per acre. Whereas, if the road passes us by and enters a neighboring town, our farms and village property will very soon depreciate, and our business interests suffer material deterioration. To secure the road, therefore, is a measure of self defense which Tecumseh cannot afford to slight. If our large real estate owners, business men and farmers—all vitaliy interested—come to the front and work we can secure the road. If they do not we must let our neighboring towns reap all the advantages which we now have so near our grasp. It is a hardy man indeed who is willing to bear this responsibility.

But the work of canvassing is being energetically carried forward with very satisfactory results; and the matter can be placed beyond a doubt in a very few days, if, as a community having vital interests at stake, we simply lay off our coats and go to work.

DR. G. A. HESS.

Dr. Hess, since his success in curing the cancer with which Mr. Ezra F. Blood was afflicted has had half a dozen more similar cases, all of which he has treated successfully. In fact his cures of cancers is something remarkable, as he cures many cases which have been given up as hopeless by the regular physicians. He makes a speciality also of hemorhoids and piles, and has cured many stubborn cases of this nature during his stay in Tecumseh. His office is now located at the Pioneer House, where patients can find him.

In Memory of Cousin Eva.

She was taken away from that circle
Of brothers and sisters so kind,
And beckoned away by the angels one day,
To sweet rest in the peaceful clime.

So young, was the thought as we gathered
Around her that sweet Sabbath day,
So young to be taken from this world
Never more to brighten our way.

But oh, how the little ones miss her,
And father and mother so dear,
But they know she is more blest and happy
Than during her pilgrimage here.

But now as that family gathers
At home, as in days of yore,
They know there is one, a dear loving one,
Not lost but gone before.

But we know she is free from all sorrow,
Her grief and afflictions are o'er,
We know she's a bright shining angel
Far away on that evergreen shore.

As we look in the dark City vista,
Of numberless days to come,
We know not the day nor even the hour
When we shall be welcomed home.

But oh, how sweet will the meeting be
When Eva at last we find;
In the portals of love with joy above,
Forever more sublime.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

THE REVISION OF THE RULES.

The Conscience Fund and the Inter-Oceanic Canal.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 13, '80.

The proceedings of Congress are still without special interest. When the general debate on the new house rules closed in Committee of the Whole it was thought that their speedy adoption would follow and that other subjects would come to the front. But the rules still hang fire to the exclusion of more interesting if not more important matters. The great trouble is in getting an agreement to the revised rules coming from the ambitious jealousies of the different Committees. It has been generally claimed that the Appropriation Committee has too much power. That Committee has charge of all bills appropriating money out of the Treasury and under the code at present governing the house this amounts to absolute control over such measures. The report of a Committee, favorable or adverse, generally carries a measure with it and when is added to this prestige complete control over the debate and other movements relating to the bills, as a preference over all other business, it may readily be seen what immense power the appropriations committee wields. Other Committees are struggling to obtain some of this importance. The Commerce Committee wants to take charge of the River and Harbor improvement bill, that greatest of all legislative swindles, and the Committee on Public buildings and grounds is ambitious to get control of all appropriating money for these purposes. So far they have partially succeeded, but in the squabble the entire revision may be lost by a defeat of the rules as amended, upon the final vote. The Appropriation Committee is so much exercised over the matter that all work on the business before it has been suspended until this question is settled. Both Speaker Randall and Mr. Garfield are working like Trojans to keep the power where it has always been.

One of the curious phase of human nature is illustrated through what is known at the Treasury Department as the "Conscience Fund." Every now and then an item appears announcing receipt by the department of a contribution to this fund. These contributions nowadays vary from one dollar to between one and two hundred. A few years ago they were much larger. The money comes from all parts of the country, Philadelphia and New York leading in the number of contributions. A member of Congress from New York, when Mr. Bristow was in the Treasury, referring to this fact, remarked that it showed conclusively that New York and Pennsylvania were the most religious states in the Union. Mr. Bristow replied that he did not regard it in that light; in his opinion it only showed that these two states had done the most stealing. The money which comes in from conscience stricken people is on account of frauds on the customs, frauds under the old income tax law or on the revenue. The income tax having been abolished some years ago, contributions on its account are very few now. The first record of money received by the government from repentant defrauders is in 1863. When General Spinner was treasurer he kept the account separately, but the practice was discontinued. The money now, as it has been for the greater number of years since 1863, when the contributions began, is turned into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. It is not known how much the conscience money now amounts to. The total amount from December 1st, 1863, to June 30th, 1874, is given in the Treasurer's report for the latter year. It was $162,914.— Since then no account of the contributions has been kept. Treasurer Gilfillan, however, estimates that the money now foots up $250,000. The contributions as a rule, come through the mails with a note stating for what purpose the money is forwarded.— Very frequently the penitential explanation is included. Some of these explanations are very curious.

The leading topics in Congress at present are the Inter-oceanic Canal project, the proposition to make the Commissioner of Agriculture a Cabinet officer, and the scheme to organize a new Territory out of what is now the Indian Territory. Both these latter schemes will fail, and they ought to fail. A lively and probably bitter political debate is shortly threatened over the Fitz John Porter case. Gen. Logan in the Senate and Gen. Garfield in the House are prepared to defend the action of the original Court Marshal and resist to the end the effort of the majority to restore General Porter to rank in the Army. Lent is upon us and the galieties of the last few weeks will in a measure suspend. The last public reception at the White House occurred on Saturday evening and there was a general rush. The crowd was composed of all classes of people, high and low, elegantly attired and plain.

The barn of Lysander Richards in the township of Chesterfield, Macomb county, was burned on the 12th. Three horses, one steam threshing machine, and a quantity of hay, grain, etc., were destroyed. Hesse gave himself up, and the coroner's jury returned a verdict of accidental death, but Hesse is still in jail waiting the action of the Prosecuting Attorney. He is 39 years old, and almost frantic over the catastrophy.

The Grand Rapids Eagle says that some of the farmers of Byron township, in that county, because hay and feed are so high, are shipping their cattle to Iowa to winter and fatten, believing that at present rates of freight they can do so cheaper than by keeping them at home. Many of them will be brought to Chicago in the spring and sold for fat cattle. This sort of movement has been quite general in Allegan county the past month, and it is stated that about seventy-five carloads of cattle have been so shipped from there. Some 200 head were so shipped from Dorr on the 11th.

TUMBLE IN PRICES.

If the coming spring and summer do not witness a big tumble in the price of grain and stocks all the signs of the times will be contradicted. Regarding grain, the market is glutted everywhere. The elevators are crammed as they never were before. Nearly sixty million bushels of wheat are actually in sight in this country, while thousands of farmers still cling to their crop. Having held it for a rise until the market was closed, they now hold it because they cannot sell. It is mostly the better class of farmers who now hold their wheat—the men of a thousand bushels and upwards; the smaller ones not being able to carry it. Those who have been among them through the winter, and who are best capable of judging, estimate the quantity of wheat in the country as high as one hundred million bushels. There will no doubt be a vigorous movement of this toward the seaboard when navigation opens, but it will have to be something unprecedented to clear away such an accumulation. The sudden falling away of the European demand this winter has puzzled the oldest operators, and the high figures to which the great staple was pushed in anticipation of that demand have already fallen away at a frightful rate. The mistake made was in merely calculating on deficits in European crops, without allowing for the fact that the people of Europe had been making up such deficits for several years and had got pretty well to the bottom of their purses. Instead of buying American wheat to make good the barrenness of their own fields, they are now making shift without it. They are eating cheaper food or going hungry, and they will continue to do so for some time to come. On the heels of this will come the harvesting of the crop now in the ground in this country, the greatest acreage that was ever put down, and which so far at least, in spite of the open winter, is said to be thriving famously. There is no reason to expect that it will not get through the spring as well as usual. If so the next crop will be even more enormous than those which have preceded it. What will be done with it? The impoverished people of the old countries cannot take it at anything like present prices. It will have to come down.

The Bull's Head, New York, is the great depot of exchange, barter and sale of horses; at it are located all the prominent horse-dealers, and every man in want of a horse, be it either a trotter, stately carriage horse or for a junk dealer's wagon, is certain of finding what he wants, either in quality or price. All are accommodated.— Every day carloads of horses are bro't to it; in their transportation they are frequently bruised and maimed. The dealers find nothing so quick, speedy and sure as Giles' Liniment Iodide Ammonia. You will, if a listener hear the following: "Hello, Dan, what ails that horse?" "Kicked on the right front knee—swelled as large as a big turnip." "Rub it with Giles' Liniment; that never disappoints; be all well to-morrow." And so it goes; everyone who uses it once will never be without it.

THE FARMERS' PAGE.

FARM EXPORTS.

Competition Between American and European Farmers.

At the annual meeting of the New York State Agricultural Society at Albany, January 21, the Hon. Horatio Seymour on retiring from the presidency of the Society delivered an able address in which he considered the future of American agriculture, and particularly its relations to European farming. We give a few extracts from the address:

PRESENT PROSPERITY.

The immediate causes of our prosperity, he said, have been the abundance of our crops and a failure in those of Europe. We cannot count upon these for our plans in the future. The next summer may reverse the fact and Europe may produce an abundance and we may lose from unfavorable influences upon our fields. Will they pass away with the year just closed, or has there been developed underlying conditions which have been gradually forming, and which are now to show themselves with great power and in grand proportions? This is, for us, the overshadowing question of the day, and it will lead us into many inquiries and investigations before it is solved. I believe that our country has entered upon a new era in its relationship with Europe. While it is not probable that our exports of food the next year will equal those of the past, still the channels of commerce which have been opened will not be closed, but will gradually grow wider and deeper. These will make permanent changes in our dealings with that Continent.

This fact that North America, with its vast extent of fertile vacant lands, now almost touches Europe with its over-crowded population, is one which excites the most varied speculations with regard to the results which must follow, bearing upon all phases of civilization, politics and power. History tells of no event more striking or significant. There is now what properly may be called a conflict between our agriculture and theirs. During the past year we have fairly "bombarded Europe with casks and barrels of animal and vegetable food." While these relieve famine, they also excite alarm in many quarters by their effects, not only upon our agriculture, but upon social and political organizations. It has become a contest between American farmers and European land-owners. Let us compare the power and resources of the combatants.

AMERICA'S RESOURCES.

The variety of our farm products is a protection against disasters from unfavorable seasons, as some grains are helped by causes which harm others. If an entire wheat crop should be cut off, it would be a great loss, but it would make no hunger here, for it amounts to only a quarter of the products of Indian corn. We have not only a greater variety of the fruits of the earth, but our climate gives them to us in successions which add greatly to their value and the comfort and enjoyment of our people. But it is not only in extent of territory, abundance and variety of products that nature favors us. While in Europe short rivers and narrow valleys tell of frequent ranges of high lands which hinder commerce, with us lakes and rivers bind our States together with silver links in ways that give us a ready and cheap exchange for all that we can raise or make.

GROWTH OF POPULATION.

In ten years our numbers will be about twice those of the United Kingdom. We have now 50,000,000, and less than the usual ratio of increase will give us 62,000,000, in 1890. Many who now live will see 100,000,000 of busy inhabitants within our borders. We are forming what is not yet fully developed—the American character. Those who study the influence of this intercourse upon the common grounds of our country, will be impressed with its mutual improvement of all minds and characters. Immigrants do not merely give us numbers, but also wealth in a way unknown elsewhere. The money they bring with them amounts in the aggregate to a large sum. But this is unimportant in comparison with another fact. We have many millions of acres of rich lands, which the government holds at a nominal price, or which it will give to actual settlers by our homestead laws. While they are vacant they are of no value. When in the course of a few years a million of hardy immigrants, usually in the prime of life, land on our coast they may be without wealth. But the moment this multitude of poor men and women plant themselves upon the millions of acres of land, of no previous value, the union of two kinds of poverty evolves, as if by a chemical action, enormous wealth. This does not fall away as time goes on, but it grows each year. Wealth cannot grow in this way in Europe. It is this fact which gives our country its swift increase of wealth.

IMPORTANT QUESTIONS.

If all the statements I have made are correct, still the facts remain that the people of Europe have heretofore been able to raise most of the food they need. Why can they not hereafter, with the same labor, on the same soil, raise enough to supply their wants, except for the small amount which they have heretofore imported? Why can we expect, with ordinary seasons, that we can sell them more than we have done in past years; that although we may raise grain and make provisions for less than they can, will not the effect of this be merely to reduce the price which farmers will get and not the amount of food they will produce? These questions bring into view some facts of great interest in many respects.

In the first place, where farmers own their lands, as they do with us, all that they can get for what they sell goes to those who labor upon the soil. But as a rule in Europe and particularly in Great Britain, what is made upon farms must support at least two and sometimes four classes of persons; the tenant, who does the work, the landlords, and usually some agent or middlemen, who hire and sub-let to tenants. Church rates and many other charges must also be paid. When our cheap grain reaches their markets, as they will hereafter and govern the prices of produce, they disturb the existing arrangements. The tenant must have enough to live upon then as now, taxes and tithes must be paid, and only what is left will go to the owners. This class are to suffer. If you read the debates in Parliament, you will see that an attempt is made to excite sympathy for British farmers. But the parties who really are affected are British landlords. The conflict is not between American and British farmers, but American and British landlords. If the cost of produce falls, rents must come down, for tenants can pay no more and landlords will get no more than prices will give. The tenant's share cannot be less than it now is and the loss must fall upon the owners.

THE HOME MARKET.

I have dwelt upon foreign markets, as they deeply concern us; but we must not overlook home transactions, which are still more important. The prosperity which agriculture has given to all other industries and pursuits will not react in its favor and make new demands for its products. Nearby cities and towns make the best customers for our fathers. They buy many things which will not bear long transportation, and which are free from a widespread competition. For this reason, in their vicinity lands bear the highest prices. The great cities of the world are placed in a belt running round the earth, following a certain mean temperature. As the climates of different latitudes vary, this belt follows temperature whenever it sways to the north or south. There may be more fertile lands north or south of this belt, but their cities are not as large or farms as valuable. The reason for this is that there is the most activity and wealth where there are the most wants, with the means of meeting these wants by industry and intelligence.

It is in our country that these truths are seen in their clearest light. Here there are more business activity, larger cities and towns in proportion to our population than in any other part of the world. This is due to the fact that we have more wants and more means to meet these wants than any other people. Those of an American are at least one-third more than those of an Englishman in the same condition of life. At the South, where the great majority are tillers of the soil, although they have a monopoly of furnishing the world with cotton, yet their cities are small, their wants are few compared with ours, and their wealth far less. Our seasons, our wants, our habits, will ever so multiply varied industry that the farmers of the Northern belt of States will have a larger proportion of home consumers, and of nearby markets in great cities, than can be found in any part of Europe in proportion to the number of those who till the soil.

PROTECTION FOR SHEEP.

A correspondent in Dunton's Spirit of the Turf has lately visited the breeding farm of Messrs. De Graff & Hopkins at Janesville, Minn. Besides horses and cattle the farm has a flock of 150 sheep which are protected from dogs and marauding animals by some elk which are kept in the pasture with them. The correspondent says: "On our way to the Blue Grass pastures we halted many moments to see the grandest sight of a lifetime—those great fat elk, who attract the visitor at Lake Elysian always. A picture seldom seen anywhere, but especially at a great stock farm. These elk are the product of a pair brought from Lake Kampska by Col. A. De Graff, in the spring of 1874, are 17 in number, and now occupy a 40-acre park, where they are as carefully tended as the horses or blooded cattle. One hundred and fifty sheep are their companions, and no dog or wolf dare enter their fold. Better than any shepherd, they watch for those animals which pray upon them. Thus while they protect themselves they protect the sheep as well, and thus are useful as well as ornamental."

JOSEPH E. SMITH.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets attests to it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

AR SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external disease.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have not space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

Godey's Lady's Book for March.

Godey's Lady's Book for March is a choice number of this old established favorite of the fair sex. Its fashion plates are numerous and beautiful, giving the latest styles of costume for the blustering month, that, turning away from winter, hesitates to smile cordially on spring. There is a very pretty design for a tobacco bag upon the the novelty page that will give ladies a hint for presents to gentlemen, and the work department is most suggestive of pretty things to be made at home. The diagram is a pattern for a street wrap of new design, and will be especially useful at the season when the heavier wraps of extreme cold weather are discarded. We will furnish the HERALD and Godey's Lady's Book for one year at the low price of $3.10 on application at this office.

W. BRADFORD WILLIAMS of New York, Chas. P. Russell, of Detroit, and Mrs. W. B. Mumford of Adrian, will take parts in the programme at the Opera House to-morrow evening.

RAISIN VALLEY.

Dr. Test has been feeling quite indisposed the past week.

The Raisin and Valley boys play ball on Monday afternoon if the weather permits.

Townsend Sutton and Thos. Mead went East on Monday of last week—destination Boston.

The senior class at the Seminary, numbering nine, hold "class socials" once a week.

Walter Jones attended as a delegate the State temperance meeting held in Jackson last week.

The red ribbon pound social at A. J. Pattis's on last Monday evening was largely attended and a very pleasant time spent by all present. The proceeds of the sales, which amounted to about six dollars, was applied toward replenishing the club fund. Prof. Lowrie, of Adrian, is expected to address the next meeting of the club.

The friends of Josie Colvin having planned a surprise for her, met at Lucie Tefft's on Saturday evening last and proceeded in company to Miss Colvin's where a most enjoyable evening was spent by all. Thanks to Josie for entertaining us so admirably. It was the largest gathering of old Seminary friends we have met in a long time.

Last Wednesday evening as Mr. A. Crandall, accompanied by Mr. Willets was returning from Adrian, his horse suddenly becoming unmanageable, began to kick and run, throwing Mr. Willets out, bruising him some on the back and shoulders. The horse then veering to the side of the road threw Mr. C. out, his head striking a stump. He was taken up in an unconscious condition and carried home. Drs. Test and Layard were quickly called. At last accounts Mr. C. was much improved. The horse, after throwing both out, ran the buggy against a tree completely wrecking it, and then ran against a second tree killing itself instantly.

The insurance on N. A. Darling's dwelling house was adjusted the 11th, $1,700 00 being the amount allowed.—Mr. Darling received $1,450 00 and his mother $250. The farm has been sold to Rev. W. Q. Burnett, who contemplates rebuilding the house the coming summer.

Who will take the Post Office at Lake Ridge? is now the question.

The horse barn of D. T. Lewis burned down the 18th. Fire supposed to have originated from parlor matches under horse's feet, distributed while grooming, as it took place in the day time, when no one was about the barn, and commenced in the stable litter. Horse was released by reaching through and cutting tie strap and was not seriously injured except the loss of one eye. Insurance light.

The musical concert by Miss Scudder at the hall Saturday night, brought out a full house. Some of the singers failed to put in an appearance, to their discredit, but it was passably good after all. Net receipts about $18.

The donation at J. G. Boyd's last Friday night, in the interest of the Reformed church of South Macon, resulted in $40.

There will be a necktie social and supper at the hall Wednesday night.

Wm Curry sold 14 hogs at Tecumseh last week averaging 400 lbs. each. But John Linton killed the boss hog which weighed 704 lbs. dressed. He is trying it up for lard, the buyers claiming that it would spoil before they could get it to Buffalo.

What has become of the "Governor boom"? Why wouldn't J. J. Woodman, of Paw Paw, make a good governor? We don't know what his politics are but know him to be a talented, clever, good looking, well built man, and possessed of large experience and executive ability, and an earnest advocate of the agricultural and productive industries of the country.

A little child of John McMullen, of West Milan, fell from a high chair upon the stove, burning it so terribly that it died within an hour.

FRANKLIN.

How little we are able to judge of the real character of an individual from hearsay. Scandal mongers can make of a person, who would scorn to do a mean act, a destroyer of domestic peace, an artful designing wretch of one whose life has plainly shown how they detest falsehood, deceit and crime, and the very faults which evil minded persons accuse her of possessing. In short what is the use of dying to receive punishment when there are evil minded people whose entire time is spent in scattering falsehoods upon every breeze, which is sure to waft it to aching hearts, and fan the flame of misery in those who possess attributes which render them sensitive to the speech of people. Oh, my friends, did you ever pause to think how the heart that would love every human being under the sun must be wounded by the lies of those who have no hearts to ache for any one.

Let a stranger come into a neighborhood, and how soon the story will go afloat that they have a cloven foot. If they be a visitor it matters not, but if they come and take up their abode in a strange land God have mercy on them for no one else will. Almost any man could beat and abuse and finally drive his wife from home, but few men could make a community believe that some neighbor was the cause of their separation, especially one who had counselled her to stay for her child's sake, even tho' she was obliged to bear all the abuse that a human fiend could heap upon her.

Why is it that people will believe the stories of a man whose whole career has been marked by infamy and falsehood? The only way that I can solve the mystery is that the masses are more prone to believe evil than good of any one. But Hope, ever to her duty true, whispers softly, bear patiently the ills you have to bear, and soon the beautiful sunburst of truth will dispel the mist of falsehood that has enveloped you. Continue to sympathize with the down-trodden, give your little mite to the poor, visit the sick, and comfort the dying, and scorn to oppress the orphan, and to admire eloquence upon any subject, to entertain strangers kindly, be they jews or gentiles, christians or infidels; not for the hope of any reward, but because the greatest pleasure you enjoy is derived from doing unto others as you would be done by.

We are in receipt of a copy of the Michigan Pioneer Collections from Mr. F. A. Dewey, which is a very fine collection, and we would recommend it to every school library.

The concert given on Thursday evening by the singing class, under the direction of G. P. Wright, was a grand success. The class will give another concert of an entire new program on Thursday evening, March 11th, at Ayres' Hall. Admission 10 cents.

Our little burg was aroused on Tuesday by Will Shultis' team, which was left standing with a load of poles on the wagon. The team started, distributing the poles down along Monroe street, and finally bringing up against a tree in front of Uncle Henry Smith's, doing some damage in the line of spokes.

JUDGE COOLEY, they say, is an early riser.

RIDGEWAY.

John Barnaby, of Monroe county, has been with us for a few days.

Miss Thornton, of Ohio, has been spending a fortnight with her sister, Mrs. Frank Pocklington.

Mrs. Wm. H. Arner has so far recovered her health as to be able to attend the donation last Thursday night, where she received the congratulations of her many friends.—Good for Ted.

Report says that Carlisle will return to Ridgeway shortly, which will probably put an end to speculations in regard to the P. O.

A prominent Maconer who came over to Ridgeway one night last week to attend a walk-around held in Geo. Gripton's shop, got rather unceremoniously dumped in the ditch while on the way home with his dulcina, and was obliged to strike a lucifer to repair damages, and that is what gave him away.

A wooden wedding at Chas. Dibble's on last Monday, and a housefull of relatives in attendance. The presents were both useful and ornamental.

Mrs. Peter Arner died at the residence of her son Jacob Arner in this village on last Friday morning, at the advanced age of eighty-three. The funeral took place at the Church on Saturday afternoon. Discourse by the Rev. De Spelder, of Macon.

The donation at the M. E. church last Thursday night was well attended. Cash receipts $125. The supper was well attended too, upward of two hundred eating. The seemingly inexhaustable resources at the command of the table committee led us to take a sort of investigation trip into the culinary department, where we found Mrs. Wilson and a corps of assistants carving and dishing. After we had been stood up in a corner, with a biscuit and a hunk of chicken in one hand and a cup of coffee in the other we began to take in the situation, and the victuals. Such a heap of good things as we saw there beggars description.

The canvassing committee for the railroad are meeting with good success this week. We felt rather discouraged for a while on account of the wet blanket Tecumseh seemed to hold over the project. But when we heard that she had taken a new hold then our folks began to "git up and dust."

Five Years of Married Life.

Mr. & Mrs. Charles Dibble, of Ridgeway, celebrated their fifth anniversary of their marriage on Monday last, the 23d. The guests began to arrive at an early hour in the forenoon, and soon the house was filled; the guests in attendance numbering over thirty and never has it been my lot to attend a party where both old and young seemed to enjoy themselves better.—There were five generations present, the oldest, Grandma Barrett, being 87 years old. After a few hours very pleasantly passed in social converse the guests were seated and Mr. H. F. Barnes, in behalf of their assembled friends, made a formal presentation of the wedding gifts in these words:

"Mr and Mrs. Dibble, Dear Friends: Please accept these tokens of our loving interest and of our warm congratulations that you have lived five years of happy married life, and we are gathered around you with earnest wishes for your welfare. Hoping that you may live many years to enjoy the blessings of health, and of the peace that cannot be taken away, and that you may live to celebrate many anniversaries like this."

Miss Eda Barrett then delivered a recitation entitled "The Tin Wedding.

A feast of oysters and cakes followed, and after a few more hours very pleasantly spent the guests departed to their homes. As the evening came on the house was again filled; this time with young people, and again oysters and cakes were made to suffer. At about eleven o'clock the guests began to disperse, all wishing Mr. and Mrs. Dibble many years of happiness and all feeling that they had enjoyed a happy reunion.

The following is the list of gifts:

CLINTON.

Now look out for that law 'shingle.'

More new buildings are now under way at this place than at any previous time for years past. The "News building" on the corner of Chicago and Jackson streets, begins to loom up majestically, as also does the new meat market alongside.

Mrs. George A. Kies, of Howell, is spending a few days among her many old friends in Clinton. Her husband is head clerk in the clothing department of the large retail house of McPherson & Sons, Howell.

Trot out your "corporation steeds" for the very important March races next week.

The funeral of Mrs. A. G. Burton took place Tuesday at the family residence, and was largely attended. Deceased had been a great sufferer for the past five years from cancers, having had during that time no less than fifteen, each of which had been successfully cut out at different times, but from the operation upon the last one, about a week ago, she did not seem to rally, and gradually failing, peacefully, tranquilly and apparently without a struggle, passed quietly from death unto life, early Sunday morning. A devoted and faithful wife, a tender and affectionate mother, a true and constant friend has been taken from our midst, and we cry in vain to have her place filled in the family or social circle.

Robin redbreast, that old familia friend arrived here on Tuesday.

Died, on Sunday, Feb. 22d, Margaret, the third wife of A. G. Burton, aged 45. She was born in Gorham, Ontario county, N. Y. Mrs. Hattie Jonson, of Cleveland, O., a daughter, and Miss Minnie Smith, a neice, of Niles were here at the funeral, also a Mrs. Giddings, sister of the deceased.

Orange blossoms in prospect for Wednesday of this week.

A boy baby born to James and Carrie Clark.

A spelling match and shadow pantomine were among the attractions at the red ribbon meeting Monday evening.

Warder, Mitchel & Co. have invited all the agents who sell their reapers and mowers to a grand banquet at Springfield, Ohio. Expenses paid by the company. Frank Brown is the favored one in this community.

J. C. Burroughs has a pig preserved, which in the head department is a little out of the common order of porcine formation. It has one eye in the centre of the forehead an inch in diameter; above this is a tiny trunk about two inches in length. The nose is thin at the top, and neither probosis or nose have any breathing holes, consequently it died of suffocation. Mr. B. has also a quantity of stuffed birds, but a pair of paroquets, he has, are beauties, a trifle larger than a sparrow. He has also a black African finch, a mocking bird, &c.

Popular Songs.

"I am King o'er the Land and the Sea." A beautiful bass solo by Will. L. Thompson, price 35 cents.

"I'm Wandering in Distant Lands." An easy but very pretty song and chorus, by Calvin Bushey, price 30c.

All lovers of popular music should order these favorite songs.

We will mail the two for 50 cents.—Catalogues sent free on application.

AN account of "Gathering India rubber in Nicaragua," written by an officer in the U. S. Navy, and illustrated with four "striking" pictures, is promised for the March St. Nicholas.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

INO AND UNO.

Ino and Uno are two little boys,
Who always are ready to fight.
Because each will boast
That he knows the most,
And the other one can not be right.

Ino and Uno went into the woods,
Quite certain of knowing the way.
"I am right! You are wrong!"
They said, going along
And they didn't get out till next day.

Ino and Uno rose up with the lark,
To angle awhile in the brook;
But by contrary signs
They counted their lines,
And brought nothing home to the cook.

Ino and Uno went out on the lake,
And as they got deeply wet,
By the direction prompted
They paddled and paddled,
And the boat they were in was upset.

Though each is certain of everything to have,
They must not be foolishly going
And to quarrel and fight
Over what we think right,
If you know, and I know, quite wrong.

—St. Nicholas.

A TERRIBLE NIGHT.

A Tale of Baltimore.

I am no politician. I am a provision dealer—a wholesale provision dealer—doing business in New York City. Having commenced my veritable history with the above assertion, it is necessary that I should inform the reader how it was that I was a member of the New York delegation to the Democratic convention held in Baltimore some years ago.

One evening in the latter part of May I was seated with my wife in our pretty house, on Eighth street, enjoying a fragrant cup of tea—for if there is one thing that I am a good judge of it is tea. My wife had been shopping, and while I was sipping my Hyson flavored with orange, Pako she was showing me her purchases. She was expatiating on a "love of a bonnet," when we were both started by a violent ring at the bell, and in a minute or two afterward a servant entered, informing me that Mr. Lawrence Ardew wished to see me immediately. As Ardew was a particular friend of mine—I immediately ordered him to be admitted.

"Gunby," said Ardew, as soon as he had paid his respects to my wife, (I should have told you before that my name is Jonathan Gunby,) "Gunby, I want you to do me a great favor."

"What is it, my dear fellow?" I replied. I could afford to be affectionate, for I knew that Ardew was too rich to want money.

"You know that I am a politician?" said Ardew.

"I know you are," I returned, "and not much good it has done you. To my certain knowledge you have not received a cent benefit from it; on the other hand, you have spent a good many hundred dollars."

"Just wait till —— is elected President, and then you will see; but that is not the question. I am a delegate to the Baltimore convention, and I want you to act as my substitute."

"What!" I cried, jumping up from my chair in excitement. "I, Jonathan Gunby, wholesale provision merchant, act as a member of a political convention! never, my dear friend, never!"

"But you must. I will pay your expenses, and the trip will do you good. I have noticed that you seem to be thinner than you used to be; a change is the very thing for you. The fact is, I have an important lawsuit going on, and it is utterly impossible that I can leave New York. You must do this favor for me, my dear Gunby."

"But, Ardew, I never attended a political meeting in my life," I replied, somewhat softened by the fact that all my expenses would be paid. "I should make a blockhead of myself, for I know nothing of the rules and regulations of such assemblies."

"You don't want to know anything; all that you have to do is to vote through thick and thin for ——."

"But I don't like the man."

"You have nothing to do with that. I do like him; and you will be voting for me."

"Johathan shall not go to that awful rowdy city, Baltimore," said my wife. "He will be killed by the 'Plug Uglies,' 'Blood Tubs,' or 'Black Snakes.' It is not safe to walk the streets there. I'll never consent to his going."

"You need have no fear on that head, madam," said Ardew; "they have got a new police there, and Baltimore is one of the quietest cities in the Union."

I need not detail any more of the conversation; suffice to say that Ardew persuaded me to act in his place, and the hint of a handsome present from the monumental city so mollified my wife that she gave her consent.

On the appointed day, provided with the necessary vouchers, I started on my journey, having first faithfully promised my wife that I would not venture in the streets of Baltimore after dark. I shall not detail the particulars of my journey. Were I to do so I might describe how crowded we were; how we were annoyed by a squalling infant that it was utterly impossible to silence; how we were delayed in the crossing of the Susquehanna by some accident to the ferry-boat; how I tried to read, but could not on account of the perfect Babel around me; how I endeavored to make fun of the boys who sold apples, and had the laugh turned against me by those youthful venders of that wholesome fruit. All this, and a great deal more, I might tell, but as every traveler goes through the same experience it would only be repeating an old story.

We reached Baltimore at last, and I was immediately driven to Barnum's Hotel. I had some difficulty in making my way to the clerk's counter, the hall was so crowded with people.

"All full, sir," said the gentlemanly clerk, as I pulled the book toward me to enter my name.

There was no help for it. I went round to the Gilmor House and received the same reply. It was the same with the Eutaw, and the Howard House, and a half dozen other hotels. It was getting dark, and I began to think I should have to sleep in the hack all night.

"Try Old Town, Bill," said a friend to the hackman who saw my dilemma.

"They are only third and fourth rate inns there," said the driver, "and perhaps the gentleman would not like to lodge there for a night?"

"Anywhere that I can get a bed, my good fellow," I returned. "It is no use being particular at such a time as this."

The horses heads were turned round, and we proceeded down Baltimore street over a bridge which spanned a muddy stream of water, called Jones's Falls, I believe, we then plunged into a mass of intricate narrow streets, and at last stopping before the door of a very ordinary looking tavern.

It bore a nondescript-looking sign, which I was told represented a Golden Angel, by which name the tavern was known.

I entered and made my stereotyped inquiry—Whether I could have a bed there for the night. The landlord, a thick, burly-looking man, with a gleam of latent humor in his face, shook his head, and repeated the hateful words: "All full."

I turned to go way, but was recalled by the voice of the host.

"Would you mind sharing a bed with another party?" said he.

"If there is no help for it I suppose I must," I replied, "although to tell the truth it is by no means agreeable to me," and I inwardly heaped denunciations on Ardew's head for persuading me to be his substitute.

"Your bedfellow is a quiet fellow when he is asleep, although I must say he is rather violent when annoyed. He sleeps very soundly, and all you have to do is to be careful not to wake him. He has been in bed some time."

I must make a humiliating confession to the reader: I am not a brave man. I have often tried to persuade myself that I am, but truth compels me to state that a greater coward does not exist than myself. The landlord's description of my bedfellow was anything but assuring, and I was on the point of declining when the proprietor of the Golden Angel, no doubt reading what was transpiring in my mind, exclaimed:

"You are not afraid, are you?"

"Afraid! I should think not, indeed," I returned, for I was too much of a coward to brave being thought one. "I accept your offer of a half bed. Bring me some brandy and water and a cigar."

I sat down at one of the little tables in the bar-room, and puffing at my cigar I tried to persuade myself that I was very jolly. It was a miserable attempt, however. I had previously supped at a restaurant in a more modern part of the city. After my cigar was finished I asked to be shown to my chamber. The landlord took upon himself the task of being my conductor, and I followed him up a narrow rickety staircase. We kept on ascending until we reached the top of the house, when we entered a moderately sized room, but much cleaner than I had expected to find it. The ceiling was very low, and inclined in front to the slope of the roof. The apartment contained but one bed, which was placed against the wall near the door. At the opposite end of the chamber was a table, placed between two windows which looked upon the roof.

The landlord placed the lamp upon the table, and I noticed that he shielded the light with his hand as he passed near the bed.

"Be sure and don't take the light near him," whispered the proprietor of the Golden Angel; "nothing wakes him sooner than that. You see I don't know he might like my putting another man with him; and he is a very ugly customer when he's riled, I can tell you."

"I shall be careful," I replied.

"That's right. Good night," he whispered, and left the room.

He had no sooner gone than I cautiously sat down, taking care not to make the least noise. I then calmly surveyed my position. It was certainly not a very enviable one. According to the landlord's account my companion for the night was anything but an amiable character. If I should chance to awake him I knew not what might occur. He might assault me dangerously before I could enter into any explanation. I half resolved to pass the night in the chair, and not retire to bed at all. But it was one of those old fashioned, high-back chairs, and made such an uncomfortable seat that I soon tired out. I then ventured to glance around the room. My eyes naturally fell on the bed.

There was one thing that consoled me; my companion appeared to be in deep sleep, for he did not even move. I could see the ridges made by his feet at the end of the bed, and that was all. I also noticed that the bed was a very large one. The man who had possession of it lay near the wall, and there was plenty of space between him and the outside for me to lie without touching him. I screwed my courage up and began to undress—but I suddenly remembered the landlord's words, that the stranger was an "ugly customer when he was riled," which made me desist. The thought struck me that I might manage to lie on the floor, but a moment's examination settled the question in the negative, for the floor was entirely bare, and the air blew very cold through the wide chinks in the planking. I cast my eyes to the ceiling, and noticed for the first time that a heavy beam studied with numerous hooks ran through the apartment; but as I was not a bird and could not perch there, this discovery was of little use to me.

Half an hour passed away in this state of indecision. I stole cautiously to one of the windows, and gazed on the beautiful city bathed in the light of a full moon.

How quiet and calm everything looked! But the air felt fresh and cold, and I closed the window, resumed my seat in the chair. I then found myself wondering what avocation my friend in bed followed. I suddenly cast my eyes on a heap of clothes which lay on a trunk, covered over with a handkerchief, no doubt belonging to the sleeper. My curiosity got the better of my politeness, and before I scarcely knew what I was about I found myself examining his apparel. The handkerchief which covered them was a coarse cotton one, and his clothes of coarse homespun, and were such as are usually worn by drovers. My companion, then, was evidently a drover—a rough class of men who usually stand upon very little ceremony.

Partly undressed as I was, I began to feel very cold—but before venturing into bed I determined to try an experiment to see if the drover slept soundly or not. I had taken the precaution to leave the bed-room door open so that I could make a run of it if necessary. I fixed my eye on the bed as I let my boot fall. The drover was evidently a sound sleeper, for although the noise made was considerable he did not make the slightest motion. This decided me, and I hastily finished undressing and crept into bed.

Of course, I was careful not to touch my companion. I do not know how long I lay awake, but the novelty of the situation drove sleep from my eyes for some time. By degrees, however, the strangeness of my position wore off. I felt reassured by my bedfellow's sound sleep, and the gentle murmuring of the breeze outside caused me to follow his example.

I have no idea how long I slept before I commenced to dream. I suddenly, however, thought that my companion woke up and sat upright in bed; that he glared around him and at last his eyes fell upon me. He then uttered a terrible cry and threw himself upon me. In spite of my natural cowardice, I saw that if I did not struggle I should be killed. I thought I seized him by the throat, and tightning my grasp, I saw him getting black in the face. His hands fell powerless by his side, a smothering groan escaped him; but still I pressed his throat tighter—his face grew blacker and blacker.

In agony of fear I awoke, and what was my horror and dismay to find that my hand was really pressing my companion's throat. He did not move or stir, and his body felt as cold as ice.

"Great God!" I exclaimed aloud. "Can he be dead?"

I jumped out of the bed. Morning had dawned, although the sun had not yet risen. I rushed to the window and pulled back the curtain. I then ran to the bed again and looked at my companion. My worst fears were realized. He was dead black in the face—strangled in my sleep!

I shall not attempt to discribe my sensation at this horrible spectacle. My body was bathed in a cold perspiration, my hands trembled, and for a few moments I believe I was bereft of my senses. I recovered by degrees—but it was only to realize in a more acute degree the horrors of my situation. There lay my victim, and I was a murderer! My trial, conviction and the hideous gallows all passed in rapid review before me. Who would believe me? I sat down, buried my face in my hands, and sobbed like a child. My wife, my own comfortable home—should I ever see them again?

What was to be done? Should I arouse the house and make a clean breast of it? But what could I say?—tell them that I had killed a man in my sleep? Not a soul would believe the story. Could I effect my escape? Impossible; the crime would be discovered before I could leave the city and I should be arrested; then the law would take its course and I should be hanged by the neck until I was dead.

Hanged by the neck? Yes, that would be my fate. As this terrible thought crossed my mind, I cast my eyes around the chamber, and they fell upon the beam with the hooks in it. From there they wandered to the bed, the sheet covering the dead man's clothes.

A means of safety suggested itself to my mind. Suppose that I could make it appear that the man had committed suicide. Yes, that was my only chance, and I determined to put it into execution.

I took the dead man's handkerchief and advanced to the corpse with a great deal of repugnance, but with more courage than I could have anticipated. My own fearful situation no doubt animated me to an extent that I should never otherwise have dreamed of. I made a noose in the handkerchief and slipped it over the dead man's neck. I then lifted the body out of bed and standing on a chair fastened the other end of the handkerchief to a hook in the beam. I now let the body go, and it swung in space.

I jumped into my bed, and shut my eyes to close the horrid sight from my gaze. I determined to wait there until somebody should come into the room, and then pretend that I knew nothing at all about it, but that the man must have got up in the night and hanged himself.

I lay quaking and trembling for over an hour. It grew broad daylight. I felt the sun shining directly on the bed, but I dare not open my eyes for fear that I should encounter the dangling corpse. Suddenly I heard the step of two men on the stairs. They appeared to be carrying something heavy between them. The long anticipated moment was approaching.—In a few seconds more they would discover the body. My life depended in a great degree upon their opinion. If they were deceived by my ruse others might be.

The door opened, and two men entered the chamber, placing something heavy on the floor.

"Well, I'm blessed if the man has not hanged himself again," exclaimed a voice which I recognized to be the landlord's.

"By golly! that's true," said the other man. "No I see how it is; the stranger found out the trick you played on him, and not liking the idea of sleeping with a corpse, he tucked him up there to get him out of the way."

"You're right," replied the landlord; "well, he's a cool 'un anyhow, and would you believe it, last night I thought he was a coward?—that only shows how easy it is to be mistaken in people. And now he sleeps as soundly as a church; let's be careful not to wake him."

I breathed freely, for I immediately understood the whole matter. The landlord had put me to sleep with a dead man. I heard them take down the body and put it into a coffin—for it was that they had brought with them. They carried it away and I was left to myself. With my mind thus relieved I fell asleep and enjoyed two hours' delicious slumber. I then got up, dressed myself, and proceeded down stairs.

"Good morning," said I to the landlord, who was behind the bar.

"Good mornin', sir," he replied, sheepishly; "I hope you slept well."

"Splendidly," I returned: "my bedfellow gave trouble at first, but I soon got rid of him."

"I know you did," returned mine host, with a knowing wink. "Well, I must say, you are the coolest chap I ever saw."

Not another word passed between us with reference to the affair. And I afterward learned from the conversation of the people while I was at breakfast that my companion for the night was a drover, who, having made a ruinous speculation in cattle, had committed suicide by hanging himself in the chamber the night before.

I left the Golden Angel that morning, having obtained quarters at Barnum's Hotel. I went to the convention, voted six hundred times for ——, and returned home having given full satisfaction to Mr. Ardew.

I told my adventure to my friends—not as I have told it to you, dear reader, but with the same construction that the landlord of the Golden Angel put upon it. Everybody tho't I had displayed extraordinary coolness and intrepidity. There is one thing, however, to which I have fully made up my mind, and that is, I will never attend another political convention as long as I live.—Chambers' Journal.

Montreal Heard From.

R. L. Mosely, of Montreal, Canada, certified Sept. 27, 1879, that he had suffered terribly from dyspepsia, and was completely cured by taking Warner's Safe Bitters. He says: "My appetite is good, and I suffer no inconvenience from eating hearty meals." These Bitters are also a specific for all skin diseases.

AN ESSAY ON MAN.

Man was made in dry weather,
He was made of dust.

Quite a number have never recovered from their creation; they are still dry.

It is man's nature to be discontented.

Adam had a monopoly, but he could not be happy without some one to crow over.

For a while he knocked around over the Garden of Eden, and then went to the house; but he had to cook his own supper; there was no stove wood chopped, and things were in a bad shape generally.

The next morning it was the same way. He had to make his own bed and sweep out. His socks were dirty, and his arm would run through a hole in his sleeve. So he was dissatisfied.

The next night, when he went to sleep, the Creator punished him by making one of his ribs into a woman—a great misfortune to the race.

It has been six thousands years since that rib was lost, and yet man continues feeling for it.

This is a very feeling subject.

Pursuit in this case is said to be sweeter than possession.

After Eve got acquainted with her mate, she vowed that all the men in the world were not worth Adam.

Goliah was a man.

A fop is a male who is ashamed of his sex, and attempts to conceal the fact that he is a man.

Concealment in such cases is attended with but little trouble. It is only necessary to part his hair in the middle.

The family man resembles an oyster on the half-shell.

The shell is known at home—the soft side abroad.

Some men carry this resemblance in their faces. A great many men have countenances like oysters.

Job is said to have been a very patient man.

He had boils all over him.

Many a man boils all over himself when the preacher reaches "thirteenthly" on a hot summer day, and never thinks of the grandeur of Job's example.

It is natural for a man to disregard good example.

Poverty and Suffering.

"I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did them no good.—I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well and none of us have seen a sick day since, and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost—I know it.

R. Calkins, M. D., of Rochester, N. Y., certifies Oct. 6th, 1879, that he has used the Safe Kidney and Liver Cure in his practice for diseases of the kidneys and liver, and the result has been satisfactory in the extreme. He says: "I would now prescribe the same remedy to all similarly afflicted, and you are at liberty to so state in your testimonials."

TECUMSEH, MICH., FEB. 26, 1880.

BUSINESS ENTERPRISE.

The Popular Science Monthly for March contains a very able paper on the "Study of Political Economy." A short extract may serve to illustrate the present business situation of Tecumseh.

"Clearly this is the science which of all sciences is of the first importance to us. Useful and sublime as are the sciences which open to us the vistas of Nature—which read for us the story of the deep past, or search out the laws of our physical or mental organization—what is their practical importance as compared with the science which deals with the conditions that alone make the cultivation of the others possible? Compare on this ground of practical utility the science of political economy with all others, and its pre eminence almost suggests the reply of the Greek: "No I cannot play the fiddle; but I can tell you how to make of a little village a great and glorious city."

There are scores of men in Tecumseh to-day who cannot play a fiddle, but they are working zealously to show their fellow citizens how Tecumseh can be transformed from a little village into a large and prosperous city. A careful examination into the causes of municipal growth in this country during the past fifty years reveals the fact, that one of the secret springs by which towns and cities are developed lies in the acquiring of superior railroad facilities. Instances of this kind can be seen in almost every county in the northern states. Gloucester and Salem, Mass., were at one time rivals of Boston in their seaport trade. Boston acquired railroad connections with the great west and the commercial glory of Salem and Gloucester have departed. Nantucket, in the early days of this century, was the greatest whaling seaport in the world. Where is her trade now? And we have equally as good illustrations nearer home. Thirty years ago the city of Monroe, Michigan, was the leading commercial town between Buffalo and Chicago. The palace steamers which plowed the waters of Lake Erie, emtied their cargoes at the mouth of the river Raisin, thence to be transported through the peninsula and on to the great west. Monroe was the important lake port at the western end of Erie, as Buffalo was at the eastern extremity. Then the site of Toledo was a mixture of mud hole and frog pond, and when the through railroad line from east to west was brought to that point, it was found necessary to cart land from adjoining townships and fill in the Maumee swamps to form a decent site for depot buildings. Thus Toledo, when the chance presented, secured her railroad connections, and the enterprise of her business men has accomplished the rest.

Examples almost as striking are presented to us in the case of inland towns and villages. Battle Creek, in this state, is located on the verge of Calhoun county, thirteen miles distant from Marshall the county seat. She has two good railroads while Marshall has but one. Twenty-five years ago Marshall was double Battle Creek in population and wealth. To-day Battle Creek is nearly double Marshall. Elgin is one of the largest and most prosperous inland cities of Illinois. It occupies a geographical position similar to that of Clinton in this county. It secured important railroad connections and to-day has four times the population contained in Geneva, the county seat of Kane county. It has almost become a truism in business matters, that the towns which possess the best railroad facilities are the ones which outstrip their neighbors in trade, wealth and population.

The Toledo and Milwaukee railroad project affords a grand opportunity for Tecumseh to become one of the most important trade centers in Southern Michigan. It is an opportunity which does not present itself every year. It may not return in this generation or the next; perhaps never.—Then why should we not invite it in, when it stands waiting upon the threshold? Tecumseh now possesses many of the elements which make a live business town, and a pleasant home. We have church and school advantages second to no city in the State. We have a splendid agricultural country all around us. We have an orderly, industrious class of people within our borders. We have glorious associations connected with our early history, making this town an important mile post in the early history of Michigan. We have an enterprising and honorable class of business men. All we need to send us forward in a career of renewed prosperity is better railroad connections. The Toledo & Milwaukee is certainly within reach; possibly the Detroit and Butler road; and if we secure one, our chances will be much improved for getting the other. Have the friends of the Butler road ever reflected on this fact, that the surest way to get that road is to first fasten the Toledo and Milwaukee?

Many of our citizens have aided this project very liberally. The men who are engaged in active business, have, almost without an exception, given freely to aid the enterprise, but we regret that there are some men of ample ability in the village who stand aloof. They have no objections to urge against the railroad; they acknowledge its necessity. But they have no money, they say, to invest in the enterprise. These men are retired farmers and business men, persons who have a handsome property, and owe no man a dollar, persons who are living sumptuously on the interest of their money. They have means to invest in handsome residences, in opera house stock and in other improvements, which tend to benefit the town in which they live. Are they doing justice to themselves and the community by withholding aid from an enterprise which is of such vital importance to the future growth and prosperity of Tecumseh? We appeal to these men to revise their decision, consider that they are interested the same as any of us in the prosperity of the entire community, and then unloosen their purse-strings and lend a helping hand.

Many of the farmers of this vicinity have given liberally, but there are many whose names are not yet on the subscription roll. The farmers should remember that this is their road as much as ours. By its acquisition their farms will be increased in value; their grain and produce will bring better prices; their property will find a more ready sale in case they shall desire to sell; their home market will be improved for minor articles of farm production. So far as their selfish interests alone are concerned, the farmers will receive more direct benefit than any other class of people from a competing line of railroad. Then we say to the farmers "Come over and help us." In fact the question has now been narrowed down to this: Will the farmers of Franklin, Tecumseh, Raisin and Ridgeway do what they are abundantly able to do? If so the success of this project is assured.

Another obstacle which the canvassers meet in their rounds is a spirit of procrastination. Smith refuses to sign till Brown does, Brown is waiting for Jones, and Jones doesn't propose to help build a railroad for Smith. Now if Smith would promptly give his note, Brown and Jones would follow suit within twenty-four hours, and the canvassers could proceed with their work.

Our people should understand and appreciate the fact that the project is not for one man alone, but for every citizen who finds a home in this community. We cannot all fiddle, but we can all help pay the piper. Let us first secure this competing railroad and the business enterprise of our leading business men will do the rest. And every man in Tecumseh ought to feel that he should either fiddle or pay.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

A bill has been introduced into Congress to equalize soldiers bounties, and petitions are now in circulation to forward to that body, urging the passage of the bill. A Washington dispatch in a late copy of the Free Press says:

"Representative Willits received a petition, somewhat numerously signed by ex-soldiers of Lake Ridge, East Milan, Tecumseh and Ridgeway, asking for the passage of an equalization of bounties bill. As to the Tecumseh petitioners he has ascertained that the names of some were used without authority. Two have been dead some years, and others do not live in that place at all. The names in the petition are written in the same hand. This is believed to be a fair specimen of the petitions sent here in favor of the bill referred to.

The friends of this bill are injuring their cause very much by tactics of this kind. Whether the bill will become a law is perhaps a question, but there are good reasons in favor of it, and certainly the bill should stand or fall upon its own merits. It seems to be no more than justice that a soldier who served three or four years in the army should get as much bounty at least as the one who enlisted in '63 or '64 and wore the blue but a few months. But even a just cause cannot be successfully promoted by bogus petitions.

COUNTY Surveyor G. E. Kedsie is making arrangements to locate in Colorado. He will leave about the last of next month.

AMONG OUR EXCHANGES.

Grant Losing.

Memphis Avalanche.—The Georgia vote is reported sold for Sherman. Grant seems to be rapidly passing to the rear rank.

Rather Inconsistent.

Chicago News.—Protection newspapers amuse their readers with arguments to show that everybody but paper-makers should be protected by the Government.

The Cheapest President.

Indiana Democrat.—Tilden is the cheapest President this government ever had. He was elected in 1876 and up to this time he has not drawn one dollar out of the United States Treasury.

Solemnly Pledged.

Washington Post.—Mr. Hayes is earnestly reminded by one of the Grant organs that he is pledged against a second term. The reminder is quite unnecessary. The people are even more solemnly pledged than Mr. Hayes.

Good to Have Around.

Cincinnati Enquirer.—Isn't it about time Chandler, Wm. E., was raising his voice in support of somebody? Nobody cares particularly who or what Bill wants, but they all like to know that he is around. It tends to restore confidence.

Had Enough of It.

Detroit Free Press.—The gratifying assurance comes from Connecticut that there is not the slightest probability of a new trial in the Hayden case. The Connecticut people have had enough of it. So have the people of the rest of the United States.

Taffy for the Old Man.

Cincinnati Enquirer.—Editor Armstrong, of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, is believed to be quietly working up the Jewett movement in the East. His comments on the patriotism and self-denying qualities of Uncle Tilden are the sweetest kind of taffy for the old man.

A Good Appointment.

New York Tribune.—The man with courage enough to take the position of Commissioner of Indian Affairs is Rowland E. Trowbridge, of Michigan. Mr. Trowbridge is highly spoken of. If he is confirmed, he will have a great opportunity to show what an honest and energetic man can do with the Indian office.

Opens With Prayer.

Philadelphia Times.—The Blaine Club at Washington, which is largely composed of Mr. Bill Chandler and some Congressmen, always opens its meetings with prayer. Unless things go right along in the early part of June the kind of praying Chandler will do will very likely make your hair stand on end.

Uncle Sammy's Income Tax Suit.

New York Tribune.—Mr. Tilden's income tax suit has in some unaccountable way got itself into such a tangle that neither the judges nor the counsel can tell just where it is, or how they can do anything to push it forward. This is one of the many troubles which harass this misunderstood man, who is always trying to do his duty, but can't.

A Pertinent Question.

Philadelphia Times.—Hissing Geo. Wm. Curtis in a Republican convention because he believes in honesty in politics, may do very well in packing State conventions, but how will it do when the storms of November come? With the Curtis element stricken from Republicanism in New York, the only question would be whether the Democratic majority can be stopped short of 100,000.

The Rights of a Legislator.

New York World.—The Speaker of the House of Representatives in Louisiana accidentally let his pistol fall from his pocket during a session of that body. The shock discharged the weapon, and now the Attorney General of the State has filed an information against the Speaker for carrying concealed weapons. This looks like a gross breach of privilege. One of the dearest rights of an American legislator—particularly of a Southwestern American legislator—is that he shall not be questioned elsewhere for pistols produced in debate. Besides, how on earth does the Attorney General suppose that the Speaker is to maintain order?

The Best Speech Yet.

New York Sun.—The best speech thus far made in the House this session was made on Friday by the Hon. S. S. Cox of this city. It was not a long speech, but it was sound, pithy, and timely. "I am in favor," said Mr. Cox, "of having every money bill that comes here discussed in Committee of the Whole. I am opposed to any bill of a money character going through without debate and without amendment. We only truly represent the people when we stand upon that principle." Those Democratic members of the House who have a desire to see a Democrat elected President next fall will do well to cut Mr. Cox's little speech out of the Record and paste it conspicuously on their desks.

THE Butler railroad project is making commendable progress in Detroit, and it may pull through. But if it does, Tecumseh has but little show for securing the road. Shall we loosen our grasp upon a certainty that we may fish for an uncertainty?

Auction Sale.

G. D. Perry having sold his farm will sell at auction on the premises, 4 miles West of Tecumseh, in the town of Franklin, on Thursday, March 4, 1880, at 10 o'clock A. M., the following property, viz: 3 work horses, 3 good colts, 4 cows, 150 sheep, 16 hogs, 1 Kirby combined reaper and mower, quantity of hay, quantity of corn in the ear, all farming utensils upon the premises, including wagons, carriages, plows, cultivators, seed drill, &c.—Usual terms of sale. Ben Reynolds, Auctioneer.

Employment for Ladies.

The Queen City Suspender Company, of Cincinnati, are now manufacturing and introducing their new Stocking Supporters for Ladies and Children and their unequalled Skirt Suspenders for Ladies. None should be without them; our leading physicians recommend them, and are loud in their praise. This manufacturing establishment is managed by ladies who have made the wants of ladies and children a study, and they ask us to refer them to some reliable and energetic lady to introduce them in this county, and we certainly think that an earnest solicitation in every household would meet with a ready response, and that a determined woman could make a handsome salary and have the exclusive agency for this county. We advise some lady who is in need of employment to send a postal card to the Company, with her name and address, and mention this paper. Address, Queen City Suspender Company, Nos. 147 & 149 West Fourth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The bride has always lived in Tecumseh and has scores of friends here who offer their congratulations to the happy pair. May prosperity always attend them.

THE benefit entertainment last Friday evening for C. K. Spafford was a good thing in itself and it was well patronized. The Manchester band rendered valuable assistance in the program. They have just purchased a new uniform which is a decidedly tasty one, and their music is first-class as usual. Mr. Spafford had a handsome margin left after paying all expenses, for which his friends will rejoice.

THE North American Review for March is an exceedingly strong number. The first article is a paper by Hon. J. S. Black against the third term, and is devoted to a review of Senator Howe's article in a previous number in favor thereof. Judge Black's paper fairly annihilates Howe. The number contains a paper by E. W. Stoughton in favor of a third term, and many others of interest.

REMENYI, the celebrated Hungarian violinist will give one of his concerts in Adrian on Monday evening next, March 1st. He will be assisted in the program by Mrs. Emma Thurston as Soprano, Mr. Edmond De Celle as Tenor, and Julian Heinze, pianist.—The violin Remenyi uses in his concerts was manufactured by Antonius Stradivarius, in Cremona, Italy, in the year A. D. 1705. Its intrinsic value is not less than $5000. He calls it his "Princess." The train on the Jackson branch will be held on Monday evening to accommodate those who wish to attend from Tecumseh.

THE Michigan Mutual Benefit Association has adopted a new feature in its insurance policies, called the Endowment Investment Plan, by which an endowment is paid at a certain age. They also have a total disability clause in their policies by which a member who is disabled by disease or accident, will receive one-half the amount he would be entitled to in case of death. All members contribute to pay death losses, but only members on the endowment plan are assessed to pay maturing endowments. Members on the endowment plan are governed by the same rules and by-laws that the life members are. This association is enlarging its membership very rapidly, and the endowment feature will add much to its popularity.

In Memory of Washington.

Co. C. had a drill and inspection last Monday evening, in honor of Washington's birthday. In addition to the officers and members of the company, Col. Fitzsimmons, Adj. Merritt, and Asst. Surgeon Woodward were also present and a very pleasant evening was passed. After the boys had been sufficiently drilled to give them a good appetite, the table was set and a bountiful lunch of cakes, coffee and other edibles was provided, to which the boys did ample justice. We happened around just in the "nick of time" and willingly consented to enlist until after the lunch was through with. Co. C. has always properly observed the 22d of February, and their little celebration last Monday evening, although entirely impromptu, was a very appropriate affair.

Wedding Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Brown, who live just North of the village, celebrated the twenty-first anniversary of their wedding day yesterday afternoon and evening. There was a large company present and the guests were finely entertained. RAILROAD NOTES.

A citizens meeting will be held at the Opera House in this village to-morrow, Friday afternoon, at one o'clock. Matters of great importance to Tecumseh will be brought up and it is earnestly desired that every property holder in the village and township should be present.

Last Monday forenoon a meeting was held in Tuttle's hall, in Franklin. The subject was fully discussed, and the temper of the meeting was excellent. Marshall Reed and Sam'l Morey of Cambridge sang a railroad song which brought down the house. Several hundred dollars in notes were taken at the meeting and the canvassing committee are prosecuting the work with vigor again this week. Franklin is doing well now and she does not propose to be behind in doing her share. News from Ridgeway states that their committees are again at work. The splendid success in Tecumseh last week has given the canvass a fresh impetus in Ridgeway and they are improving the time this week.

The canvassers in Tecumseh are actively at work this week and are meeting with a good reception. A large number of new subscriptions have been taken since last Monday morning, and the committee will be able to make a good report at the meeting to-morrow afternoon.

The news from Adrian indicates that they are quietly taking hold of this project. W. H. Waldby has gone to work in earnest and E. L. Clark has promised a subscription of several thousand dollars. And this work is being done in anticipation that the Tecumseh line will fail.

A meeting was held at Clinton last Friday evening and the ball was again started there.

A letter received yesterday from H. S. Bunker, secretary of the Merchants and Manufacturer's Exchange of Toledo, says that committees are now actively engaged in procuring subscriptions for the Toledo & Milwaukee road, and are meeting with good success. He feels very confident that they will be able to report fifty thousand dollars subscribed within a few days.

A railroad meeting will be held at Ridgeway next Saturday afternoon at one o'clock. This is Ridgeway's last call. Every resident of that township should be present.

BROOKLYN.

A conference meeting was held at Brooklyn Wednesday evening, at which delegates from Macon, Clinton, Lake Ridge, and all the points along the north route, were present. The hall was filled to overflowing and at the hour of the meeting there was scarcely standing room. Col. King acted as chairman and Percy Cook as secretary. Two members of the Tecumseh railroad committee, as well as others from Franklin, Cambridge and Addison were in attendance, rather interested to see what would be done by the northern route. Col. Latcha addressed the meeting, and after referring to the fact that he had been engaged on the Tecumseh-Addison line, stated that the object of this meeting was to confer together, and gather from the expression of the delegates whether he could take into consideration the feasability of building the Toledo & M. R. R. along this route. That in case of the failure of the south line by the 1st of March, and it was the sense of the meeting that they could raise the amount asked, he stood ready to aid them in every way and push the matter thro' on the north line. It only depended on whether every point raised its quota as to whether the road could and would be built. A. P. Cook then called on the different delegates to assure Mr. Latcha by a pledge whether the amount could be raised. As the towns were called the delegates stated the amount raised, and the probability of success in raising the entire quota, and the whole amount was practically pledged along the entire line on the spot, and it was resolved to open an enthusiastic canvass along the whole line. A general mass meeting for the whole line was called at Clinton, Wednesday, March 3d, at 4 P.M. And when at a late hour the delegates separated for the night, it was with the feeling that the north line had secured the road.

This is what the Brooklyn and Clinton line are doing and are proposing to do, and they have headed their subscription in the thousands and not in the hundreds, and unless Tecumseh wants Clinton to side-track her and ruin her in a business point of view, she must come out and raise her quota and at once. Come out Friday afternoon.

Childrens' Entertainment.

An entertainment by the children and younger ones of the Presbyterian society will be given at the Opera House some evening next week. It will consist of two character pieces wholly by the little ones with other selections and recitations. The children are under good training, and the entertainment will be both attractive and pleasing. For further particulars see posters and program.

THE CIRCUIT COURT.

The Circuit Court for the county of Lenawee convened at Adrian on Tuesday of last week, and remained in session during the entire week, Judge Cooley of the Supreme Court presiding. The oldest attorneys in the county declare that there has never been more legal business transacted in the county during a single week, than was dispatched last week by Judge Cooley. We present below a brief synopsis of the proceedings.

THE STAR ENTERTAINMENT.

The following newspaper testimonial, taken from the Carlisle Valley Sentinel, Pa., shows how Mr. Williams' Star Entertainment is regarded in other Places.

Mr. W. Bradford Williams, a young gentleman of rare accomplishments, gave his second entertainment in Rheem's hall, on Monday evening. His selections on this occasion were grave, practical and humorous, and the ease with which he passed from the one to the other, was a marked feature of the entertainment. His impersonations of Hamlet in the style of Forrest, Booth and Davenport, and his happy rendition of those inimitable pieces, Mark Twain's "Literary Nightmare," Max Adeler's "Obituary Department" and Dr. Talmage's "Hobbies" and "Cut Behind," gave proof of a versatility of talent rarely witnessed in the same individual. The address to a "Human Skull," written by one of our townsmen, a member of the "Junior Bar," and rendered for the first time is likely to become popular, as it brings the audience to a solemn pause after bursts of laughter. We were all delighted with the entertainment.

THE Adrian Times says of W. Bradford Williams's entertainment in that city:

The literary dramatic entertainment at the opera house last night, was attended by a fair audience. The features of the program elicited the attention of the audience, from the opening to the last selection, and no one present but was highly pleased and delighted with the entertainment.

Morenci Observer: A. W. Slayton, the Tecumseh lumberman, etc., was in town on Friday, and one of his business transactions was the purchase of 20,000 feet of walnut lumber from our energetic young dealer, Eugene Baker.

PRESIDENT MAKING.

Gossip About Candidates—The Fitz John Porter Case.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 29, '80.

President making and the intrigues on all hands in behalf of the different candidates is the absorbing topic here now, the interest growing deeper day by day. Among the later rumors is one to the effect, that another liberal Republican movement is on foot directed against the candidacy of Gen. Grant and calculated to circumvent his defeat. Some of the reports have put it down that this is Secretary Schurz's Democratic year and that he is in the liberal movement, with a view to the nomination of a ticket that the Democrats will support. Bayard and Morrison has been named as the proposed ticket. But Mr. Schurz himself laughs at this report and says he knows nothing about any plan or movement of that sort. Anyhow the contest between Blaine, Sherman, and the ex-President for the Republican nomination waxes exceedingly warm. Her[illegible] Blaine is the favorite among the people, but odds and sentiment that Grant will be nominated. I won't undertake to guess the result for three months of time can work wonderful changes in political conditions.

The Democrats are a good deal at sea in respect to a candidate. At one time there was quite a very warm room for Seymour, but he has put himself out of the question by a positive refusal, on account of his physical condition. It is really interesting to hear the varying views of Congressmen and others here from different sections. Thurman still has many warm friends, but is not mentioned so much, and Hendricks is generally conceded to be out of the race. His financial record is somewhat uncertain. Tilden is old and feeble, but his spirit and determination are strong, and the party money is getting larger all the time.—There are a great many public men here who believe that Tilden is the strongest man. Montgomery Blair said to me the other day that if it was not for the Kelly-Tammany faction in New York, and the bitter opposition of the Southern Democrats who sold Tilden out in 1876, on account of his Anti-Claims letter, he would be nominated by acclamation. Bayard stock is high, but I doubt if a President be taken from little Delaware. Within the past few weeks an entirely new man is talked of—William R. Morrison, of Illinois. He has, beyond question, some very strong points. In the first place he is a Western man, which is an advantage. Next, he is as strong on the hard money question as Bayard is. Third, his record is clear on the subsidy question. He has never voted for a subsidy since he has been in Congress, now nearly ten years.—His army record is good, he having been a colonel and wounded, and last, he is a favorite with the Germans—itself a very important thing in the Northwest. In addition to all these advantages he is a gentleman, barring a little peppery language now and then. If the growing interest in Morrison does not culminate in making him one of the dark horses then I am mistaken.

Senator Bruce's committee which for several months has been investigating the affairs of the late Freedman's Bank, seems to have made a pretty fair story of the ups and downs of that delusive institution. From the testimony secured by the committee it is easy enough to see how the wreck came about, and why some six millions of dollars were still due depositors when it happened.

Congress is stubbing along about as usual. The Democrats feel a little nervous over the discussion that is pretty sure to come out of the Fitz John Porter case, because it promises to be as bitter and sharp a political and sectional debate as any that took place during the extra session. The Republicans are determined if possible, to make it appear that ex-Confederate officers in Congress are endeavoring to restore to the army a Union officer who really sympathized with their side and was, therefore, righteously convicted by the first court-martial and dismissed the service.—General Garfield is the leader in this, and very prominent in urging the adoption of the plan by the Republican caucus. The question is not to be discussed on its merits at all, but a hot and sectional fight is to be inaugurated solely for effect in the coming Presidential campaign. The Democrats don't desire to abandon a man to whom they think so much injustice has been done now that they have the power to right him and their action is sustained by a court of inquiry regularly constituted by Mr. Hayes. Still, the wisest among them are urging that the debate on their side shall be limited to the case and shall be as brief as is consistent with its proper presentation. It may be, though it is hardly possible, that they will succeed in stopping the threatened controversy.

They were all arrested and taken to Midland City in irons.

The oldest inhabitant never saw as good a winter on the Monominee for logging purposes as this has been. There has been just snow enough on the upper waters of the stream for good work all winter, and when there was danger of to much coming, rain has come in its place, but not enough to take off the snow, only enough to solidify it, and after freezing to makes the roads better than they were before. It is safe to say that the Monominee logs will not cost more than half as much as they did two years ago, and not much more than half what they did last winter. Put down the Monominee for 250,000,000 feet.

Editors "Waechter und Anzeiger," Cleveland, Ohio:—Gentlemen:—Allow me as an old reader of your valuable journal, herewith to send you a few lines, which please insert in your next issue. I will vouch for their truth, and know that by their publication a great deal of good will be accomplished.—Having been a reader of your paper for many years, I hope you will kindly grant my request.

For twelve years I had suffered, from time to time, terribly with rheumatism, to such an extent that I was unable to move about, and lost the use of my limbs. I tried everything recommended to effect a cure, consulting some of the most prominent physicians, and expended large sums of money, hoping to find relief, but without any success. Glancing over the columns of the "Wacher," I read about the St. Jacobs Oil and the many cures this remedy had effected. Having been disappointed so many times, I lost all faith in every remedy, the St. Jacobs Oil included, until I saw one day that it had cured a well-known citizen with whom I am acquainted. Other parties fully endorsed the value and wonderful power of the Oil, telling me that it had cured them of different ailments in a very short time. This brought me to a conclusion. I said to myself, "Schweizer, fifty cents won't break you," so I went to my druggist, Mr. Bock, bought a bottle of the Oil, and must now confess that the result was truly wonderful. I used it every two hours and found relief immediately upon the first application, and the pain ceased entirely after a few more applications. Fearing a new attack, I remained in bed and continued to use the remedy every three hours. All pain having left me, I arose from my bed and walked downstairs without any trouble.

Since that time I have been able to follow my occupation, and feel no pains or inconvenience, however disagreeable the changes of the weather may be. Having thoroughly tested the St. Jacobs Oil, I can conscientiously recommend it to all afflicted with Rheumatism. Fifty cents is a small expense when the services for so trifling an outlay are considered.—If I was one thousand miles away from all human habitation, I should nevertheless procure this remedy and keep it always in my house.

NORTHERN LENAWEE FARMERS' CLUB.

(This Club will hold its meetings regularly on the [illegible] at the Reform Club Hall in Tecumseh, at 2 o'clock P. M. until further notice. All are heartily welcomed and cordially invited to attend. Communications thankfully received. Correspondence solicited from other clubs, especially where co-operative action can accomplish desirable results. All letters should be addressed to E. L. RUSSELL, Sec., Tecumseh, Mich.)

THURSDAY, Feb. 19, 1880.

There was a number of the members of the Club necessarily absent today, still the interests continues to improve, and the attendance was good. We were pleased to see among the visitors present Mr. H. C. Conkling, and Mr. W. V. Wimple; altho' not now engaged directly in farming, manifest an interest in agriculture, and their presence indicates a good feeling existing between the business men of the place and the farmers.—There is no jealousy existing unless it is that the citizens of the village are out doing the farmers in the way of railroad subscriptions. We were happy to see quite a number of young farmers present, and hope the number of this class who take an interest in the Club will increase.

As the members were late in getting together there was but little preliminary business attended to, and the subject of Questions and Answers was not introduced. The following communication was read:

WASHINGTON, D. C.

E. L. RUSSELL, Sec. N. L. F. C.,

SIR:—I send you to-day circular letter and advance sheet of Agr. Rep. of 1879, on the sugar question. I wish you would call the attention of the Club to the subject. It is one of great importance. I send you the following documents, one of each to be kept in the Club rooms, the balance distributed to those who will appreciate them. The list is on the next sheet.

Yours,
EDWIN WILLITS.

The letter was read and the attention of the Club called to the subject but the matter was new to the most of the members, and as it had received no thought, there was no action taken; it will be introduced again at the next meeting. The documents enumerated in the list had not been received, only the circular letter and advance sheet of Agr. Rep. of 1879.

The subject of fencing was introduced by some remarks and figures.

There were various and numerous sources and means of drainage upon the resources of the farmer,—taxes, insurance, commissions, railroad tariffs, interest on capital invested, cash paid for labor, fertilizers, implements, improvements, and repairs, were some of the outlets that drew heavily upon his profits if not upon his capital,—but no one item of expense could probably hold a comparison to that of fencing.

The American Agriculturalist estimated that "the present cost of fencing the country was fully $2,000,000,000, and rebuilding decayed fences $200,000,000, and the interest and repairs nearly as much more. That it made an annual tax exceeding far the entire cost of the army, navy, general government expenses, pensions, and the interest of the public debt.

The Editor of the N. E. Farmer who had given the subject considerable attention says, "it takes on an average for the whole country, $1.74 worth of fence to keep $1.65 worth of stock from eating up $2.45 worth of crops.

Some figures were given, as an example, as to the cost of fencing this county.

It takes 14 miles of fence to divide a one mile section of land into 20 acre lots, 40x80 rods, giving a road around each mile section. and add 2-7 more on account of smaller sized fields and irregular tracts, and to give a road around some ½ mile sections, and we have on an average 18 miles of fence on each one mile section of land, or 2¼ miles of fence for each 40 acre lot.—This county being 25 by 31 miles it contains 775 square miles, and with 18 miles of fence to the square mile it would have 13,950 miles or 4,464,000 rods of fence, which at $1 per rod would cost, to say nothing of the interest, repairs, rebuilding, and the ground which it occupies, $4,464,000, or on an average $700 to fence each 80 acre lot.

Therefore this is no mean or inferior subject for our contemplation, and as the President remarked, that we had our farms once fenced, and those fences were now fast decaying, and the question forced itself upon us, how are we to rebuild them?

If we could dispense with one-quarter the present amount of fence, and could erect the other three-quarters upon some plan similar to some of the barbed wire fences, that would be safe and effecual and without its objections, that would cost only two-thirds or three-quarters as much, and last three or four times as long, and occupying only one-quarter the amount of land, as our crooked rail fence, we would save one-quarter of the $720, leaving $540. And this at two-thirds its present value would amount to $360 cost, and leave $360 saved for each forty acre lot, or $2,232,000 for the county on its first cost for erection, and 7 per cent interest on $360 is $12.20 and the use of two acres of land saved at $6 per acre is $12; rebuilding $720 worth of fence once in 20 years equals $36 per annum, and rebuilding $360 worth of fence once in 60 years would equal $6 per annum, saving the difference, $30 per annum, in rebuilding, and the difference in laying over and repairing may be estimated at $10.80 per annum, which gives a total annual saving of $65 on each 80 acre lot, or an annual saving to the county of $403,000.

It was stated that the American Agriculturalist had given and was giving this subject especial attention, and invites its readers to give their experience and observations with a view to call out information and stimulate inventions in this direction. It publishes cuts representing many kinds of iron fence posts, and twenty-five specimens of barbed wire of different patterns and devices. These wires average about 1 lb. per rod, and cost from 9 to 18 cents per pound. Galvanized steel wire fence is estimated to cost 67 or 68 cents per rod with four wires, and with cedar posts and five wires, it could still be built cheaper than a post and board fence.

Various agricultural papers often have articles from their correspondents condemning the wire fence as barberous and cruel and for some kinds of stock ineffectual. It no doubt has its advantages and disadvantages. It has one advantage at least upon our north and south lines, as it will not collect snow drifts, and it is not racked by the winds. There is over 100,000 miles of barbed wire fence lately erected, and experience, practice and use will soon develop its utility or its worthlessness. Every farmer should give this subject some attention, and if he arrives at any conclusions or has any ideas upon the subject worth mentioning, should communicate them to the Agriculturalist or some other journal where they would be of service to those who were trying to invent the best and cheapest fence.

Of the fences now in common use, the black ash rail fence was generally considered the cheapest and best; even by some of those who have to haul rails considerable distances, and especially by those who were situated within a few miles of black ash timber. On stock farms or pastures and grass lands there was but little loss of land occupied by fences; and on grain farms, as cross fences a rail fence could be occasionally moved and thereby dispensing with a portion of the amount used.

The hedge fence was recommended by some when properly cared for as very desirable; the objections were its tendency to root and spread, and that it saped the land for a long distance on each side.

There was some discussion upon the time to cut timber and lay over fence, the manner of setting fence posts, which end to set up, whether green or dry posts lasted longest, and the best preparation to prevent decay.

The program for the next meeting, March 4th, is miscellaneous questions and answers, and a report from the committee on setting orchards, who were to furnish a list of the amount and best varieties of the different kinds of fruits best adapted for family use. Followed by discussions upon the same.

The question for discussion March 18th is Practical Farming.

The committee had not decided on a subject for April 1st.

The annual meeting for the election of officers will be April 15th, when we hope a good program will be provided for an all days' entertainment.

On motion, the meeting adjourned for two weeks, or to Thursday, March 4th, at 1 o'clock P. M., at the Reform Club Hall. All are invited to attend.

Brown Paper Against the Cold.

The "old-woman's" remedy for a "cold on the chest," a sore throat or a bruise, which consisted in an application of brown paper steeped in beer or vinegar, owed its efficacy to the heat-retaining properties of the paper. A wet pad of this material, as far as the surface next the skin was concerned, acted almost as well as a layer of wet linen rag, protected with a thick covering of flannel. In short, stout paper of the commonest sort is an effective non-conductor, and may be advantageously employed as a covering for beds or to eke out scanty clothing. A piece of thick paper inserted between the lining and the cloth of a waistcoat or in the back of a thin coat will render it warm as well as light. The suggestion is a small one, but it is simple to carry into effect, and will be found effective.

Facts vs. Theory.—In regard to the method of coloring butter. The theory is that cows when well fed and cared for will make yellow butter; the fact is that not one in ten, except in times of flush pasture.

This is just the reason that the very best Dairymen in this country use Wells, Richardson & Co's Perfected Butter Color. We warrant it to add at least five cents per pound to the value of white butter, a return of one dollar for every cent it costs.

TESTIMONY

of the Hon. Jos. E. Gray, Judge of the Superior Court, Chicago, Ill.

CHICAGO, Dec. 14, 1878.

DR. S. D. HOWE:

DEAR SIR:—Permit me to add my grateful testimony to the army of witnesses to the virtue of your justly celebrated Arabian remedies. For a long time my wife was seriously afflicted with hacking cough, oppressed breathing, soreness of the chest, and constant acute pain in the lower portion of the right lung and under the shoulder blade. Her sufferings were intense, and she became extremely nervous and prostrated. Her disease was pronounced consumption by the physicians of Chicago and other cities, whose prescriptions had been taken without benefit. When you visited Chicago in June, 1878, we called on you, having very little hope of deriving help from your treatment. We were inspired with hope by the skillful manner in which your thorough examination was conducted, and the satisfactory explanation with which you closed your diagnosis. My wife determined to take your medicines in accordance with your plan and practical directions. She began to use the Arabian Milk Cure and Arabian Tonic; their beneficial effect at once became manifest—the cough loosened and soon ceased, respiration became easy, the soreness of the chest was relieved and all pain removed, she began to gain in flesh and improve in strength and appearance. I fully believe that your medicines and skillful advice have saved the life of my wife. She unites with me in this grateful tribute to the merit of your remedies.

Very respectfully yours,
JOSEPH E. GRAY.

BENSONS CAPCINE | CAPCINE | POROUS PLASTER

A WORD TO THOSE WHO USE POROUS PLASTERS. It is a universally acknowledged fact that

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters are Superior to all Others.

The great demand for them has caused a number of unscrupulous parties to make and sell worthless imitations under similar sounding names. As the market is flooded with inferior plasters selling at any price it is important for the consumer to know which is the best. It is well known that some of the cheap plasters have been examined and found to contain injurious ingredients which make them dangerous to use, causing paralysis and other diseases. CAUTION—See that the word CAPCINE on each plaster is correctly spelled.

Rupture

DR. J. A. SHERMAN—IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY DR. SHERMAN known to the public for the past 35 years or more through his successful method of treating Rupture without the annoyance and injury trusses inflict. His system of cure is by local external application.

No man is safe who has a rupture, no matter how insignificant he may consider it, for every man who has died from it once flattered himself that it was but a trifling ailment; and every man who now suffers from it and the injury of trusses, to such an extent that life has no enjoyments, once regarded it as unworthy special attention. It is not a stand-still affliction; it is progressive, even unto death. References given to gentlemen in the city, who have been cured. During treatment no hindrance from labor. Patients from abroad can receive treatment and leave for home same day.

HIS BOOK ON RUPTURE

gives the most reliable proofs from distinguished professional gentlemen, clergymen and merchants his successful practice and popularity therefrom throughout this country and the West Indies.

The afflicted should read it and inform themselves of the certainty of being cured.

It is illustrated with photographic likenesses of extremely bad cases before and after cure, and mailed to those who send 10 cents. Save this, and remember in writing or calling the address is

CAUTION—The reputation of Dr. J. A. SHERMAN, attained from 40 years successful practice has started around the country Pretenders who assume to be the original Dr. Sherman famous for the cure of Rupture. Two of these parties an old and young man recently turned up in Boston; they duped several by their Fraudulent Advertisements; when detected, suit was brought, but the fellows ran away leaving sorrowful victims, room rent, board bills and newspapers unpaid. Since then they have been discovered at 241 Broadway, New York, where they recently, by base deceptions defrauded an aged Clergyman.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

CLINTON.

Bob Terryberry is the owner of 12 hens. Now, Bob says he gathered just 12 pounds of eggs last Sunday, the result of one day's work of the said dozen hens.

A railroad meeting is billed for Wednesday night at Freese's Hall, which is to decide at once and forever the T. & M. railroad question at this place.

Never before has Clinton done so well in the matter of parties, masquerade or otherwise, as she did Monday night. About one hundred masked persons were in attendance, and something over one hundred dollars were reported as the gross receipts.—Among the many costumes and representations present, more particularly deserving especially mention, and which we shall briefly notice was that of Mr. J. S. Kies, who was dressed in the sacerdotal robes of a cardinal.

W. S. Whittlesey, as Christopher Columbus.

Fred Allen, as City Drug Store of Randall & Kimball.

P. C. Smith, as Susan B. Anthony.

L. K. Davis, as a wench.

G. D. Kief, as a Barber Shop.

D. L. Goodrich, as a lager beer dutchman.

Supper was served in the hall and everything passed off to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

Ed. Smith of Bridgewater, who bought the Solomon Brown premises has moved in, and Frank Brown and sister have left the old homestead and now occupy a portion of A. Roff's house.

Allen Dillingham brought to this market four dressed hogs that weighed as follows: 402, 420, 520, 560, an average of 475½. Now let some one else boast a little.

If the Clinton correspondent of the HERALD was rightly informed with regard to a certain individual Clinton would be a good location for a cancer infirmary.

A very pleasant time was enjoyed at D. St. Johns the other evening.

Saturday evening there was a surprise party at S. Parker's. It was a pleasant surprise, only the guests had to go home in that furious wind that was raging at the time.

Myron Millspaugh, while chopping in the woods, fell a tree in such a manner that it swung around striking his right arm and side, and sending him eight feet away, against another tree, bruising him somewhat, but no serious injury was sustained.

SPRINGVILLE.

Don't forget the concert.

Sugar party and dance at Ayres' Hall, Friday night, March 5th.

Marion Case is repairing his house that was damaged by fire a few weeks ago.

Considerable ploughing is being done in this vicinity this winter.

Wm Sherrard, of Lowell, is visiting friends here.

T. H. Mosher has returned from Detroit, where he has been purchasing goods for the spring trade.

Dan Marr has purchased 40 acres of land known as the Lester land, on the west side of Sand lake, and is intending to erect a house on it the coming spring.

The donation at Ayers' Hall last week for the benefit of Rev. Mr. Pierce resulted in $47.43.

Jefferson Louden claims to have sawed, split and piled six cords of stove wood with a buck saw from poles in one day last week. Now trot out your sawing machines, Jeff. is with you.

The Springville singing class will give another grand concert, under the directions of G. P. Wright, at Ayers' Hall, of an entire new program, on Thursday evening, March 11th. Admission 10c. The proceeds to be used towards the support of the coming school for the next year.

Charlie Smith missed a severe slapping the other day. While running the engine in W. H. Smith's mill, he had just passed through the door from the engine room as the main belt broke, and the ends administering a severe slapping on the door.

As the several schools in the township are about to close, and some are closed, it is thought best to close the teachers' class, held at Dist. No. 4, under the direction of Supt. J. B. Stephenson. The schools, as near as we can ascertain have been a general success the past year throughout the township. We think no pains have been spared on the part of the Superintendent to make the schools better than ever before.

RIDGEWAY.

Mite society at Mrs. J. Temple's this week.

"Clem" Lester will instruct our young ideas during the spring term.

The railroad boom seems to have utterly squelched the usual state making for town meeting.

The Lake Ridge P. O. is still a homeless wanderer. The mail carrier refuses to go down there with anything less than a letter and a postal card.

On Friday evening, March 12, the following program will be carried out by the Philo. society:

Declamations—Geo. Sandford, Fred. Hamilton.

Reading—Miss Mary Temple.

Recitations—Adah Loree, Rose Hendershot.

Essay—Nellie Clark.

Question for debate—Resolved, That men of thought have been of more benefit to our nation than men of action.

Affirmative—A. B. Clark, R. H. Nelson, Geo. Scollick.

Negative—A. B. Wood, T. H. Temple, DeWitt Arner.

Diphtheria made its appearance in Macon last week, and at this writing we learn of six cases, distributed as follows: one at John Emman's, two at M. Karcher's, two at Mrs. Rogers, and one at J. L. Remington's.—Only one death, that of Miss Remington. The Emmans and Karcher cases were improving at last accounts.

The unexpected death of "Lesia" Remington, daughter of J. L. Remington, of Macon, on Sunday night from that dreadful disease diphtheria, cast a gloom over our entire village.—She had many friends in Ridgeway. She will be greatly missed, especially so in the Sabbath School here, of which she was a member. Expressions of sympathy for the family are heard from everybody.

The short respite which our community have enjoyed from petty thieves, seems to have come to an end. About a week ago a bag of feed and another of corn took leave of G. C. Pocklington's feed grinding establishment during the night. Also a lot of chickens are reported stolen from Mrs. Laura Cheever a few nights ago. J. Wigglesworth's little boy surprised a man in the act of filling a bag with corn from a crib on his premises a short time since. And numerous other parties in this vicinity have missed small amounts of corn and other grain. There is trouble brewing for some one.

The public examination of teachers for the township will be held Saturday, March 27th. District officers should engage teachers for the spring term and notify them of the examination previous to that date.

BROOKLYN.

The railroad excitement has slightly cooled, and some doubt its being a traveling necessity, because last Saturday night two dealers in liquid merchandise got out of sight of the village Marshal and Deputy Sheriff in less time than it takes a whistle to skip round a corner.

Those who had previously favored the commercial outlet, and been active agents in securing the right of way may know their route, but the temperance part of the mourners have put their hands in their pockets, taken a back seat, and are waiting for something to turn up. They are afraid it may be another Prosecuting Attorney and in case that happens they will excursion up Salt River. The jury, the attorney, the everything disagreed.

Now there is always some definite result, when women disagree, but this resulted like the transit of those Salem Witches, that after being shut up awhile and then called for were found to have eliminated through a crack.

The latest dispatch announces the old boys to be in pursuit of the Clark's lake ghost, but the census remains unchanged, as two young boys have secured board at Bob Leonard's.

Scove Walker climbed into his wagon and spoiled his political prospects by running away from the attornial disagree, but Bob saws wood like a hero, and says that of all things that happen to men, are twins, and think what might have been.

PEARLIE.

Adrian Times: The Adrian Driving Park association, having joined the Michigan Grand Central trotting circuit, some fine sport is expected at the meeting here in May. The exact dates have not yet been fixed. The circuit comprises Detroit, Grand Rapids, Ionia, Flint, Pontiac and Adrian, and the total premiums offered amount to $48,000. The best horses in the country will be entered for these races.

Wide Awake for March, 1880.

Wide Awake for March is in advance of anything heretofore done by this magazine. The frontispiece, bearing the legend "I just wont stay in the house with such a Girl," illustrates a good story by Nellie A. Hopkins, entitled "How Uncle Tom ran away;" but the opening article is a two-part story "Billy's Hound," by Sara E. Chester, and will interest all boys who admire a dog. It promises to be one of the best stories we have seen. Only $2.00 a year. Ella Farman, Editor.—D. Lothrop & Co., Publishers, Boston, Mass.

S. S. DECKER will give a sugar party at the Sand Lake Hotel on the evening of March 18th.

THE CIRCUIT COURT.

The Circuit Court last week confined its attention mostly to criminal business. Below is a brief synopsis of the business transacted:

TUESDAY.

Mary Stocker vs. Irvin Stocker; divorce decreed.

The People vs. Willis T. Lawrence, plea not guilty entered and an application made for a continuance.

The People vs. Henry H. Armstrong; plea of not guilty entered.

The People vs. Geo. A. Lovett; order that defendant's witnesses be subpoenaed at the expense of the People.

The People vs. Arthur Hall; plea of not guilty withdrawn and plea of guilty entered.

John Mattimore withdrew his plea of not guilty to the charge of stealing a supply of winter clothing last fall, and several witnesses were sworn as to his former good character.

The Singer Manufacturing Co. vs. Eugene Childs. Judgment by default for $268.57.

The case of Harsh vs. Bartlett was given to the jury after supper and a verdict for $10 for plaintiff was entered.

A jury was empannelled and sworn on the case of the People vs. George and George E. Fairchild.

WEDNESDAY.

The case of the People vs. Lawrence was continued. The Judge intimated that the showing would not warrant a regular Judge of the Circuit in continuing the hearing more than two weeks, but his duties were such that he felt he must continue it by reason of his inability to give the time necessary to try it.

The Prosecuting Attorney asked that the case of Sizer and Armstrong be continued also. Granted.

In the case of Barber vs. Barber, an order was entered that testimony of complainant be taken before the Judge.

The case of the People vs. the Fairchilds was taken up.

The case against Bevilhammer for assault with intent to rape, still on trial.

W. T. Lawrence gave surety for his appearance at the next term of court. W. H. Waldby, Paul Reed, W. S. Wilcox and Charles Rynd are his sureties.

THURSDAY.

The People vs. John Ekelund, assault with intent to rape. Plea of not guilty withdrawn, and defendant pleaded guilty to assault and battery. Sentenced to ten days in county jail.

The People vs. Chauncey Fairchilds; false pretenses. Pleaded guilty.

The People vs. Fred Bellon, larceny; On trial.

John W. Baldwin vs. Isaiah Teachout, assessment. Judgment by default, $828.15.

In the case of The People vs. Benjamin Bevilhammer, attempt to rape, the jury were unable to agree. The jury stood five for conviction and seven for acquittal.

The People vs. Fred Bellon; jury found defendant guilty of receiving stolen property.

George Scollick was admitted to citizenship.

In the case of F. Zimmerman vs. Sarah, Geo. F., and Mary Zimmerman, the County Clerk was appointed guardian ad litem.

FRIDAY.

The People vs. George A. Lovett, larceny. Jury returned a verdict of guilty.

Channing Whitney vs. Joseph E. Everiss. Tried by the court and a judgment rendered for plaintiff for $576.19.

Mary Lane vs. Albert H. Lane. Decree of divorce granted.

The People vs. John L. Knapp, adultery. Case sent back by supreme court for new trial. Defendant withdrew his plea of not guilty. The court sentenced defendant to pay a fine of $250.

SATURDAY.

M. Adele Hazlett vs. J. C. Sawyer. Plaintiff ordered to give security for costs within thirty days.

Justus L. Hall vs. M. Adele Hazlett. Same order.

Samuel Barber vs. Hannah Barber. Decree of divorce granted.

Court adjourned till Monday morning at 8½ o'clock.

Adrian Press: The first white person born in Lenawee county is still an inhabitant of Adrian.—Billet Doux. Not much; she resides in Blissfield and was born in Ogden, and is now Mrs. C. J. Randall. Her maiden name was Amanda Valentine, and her birth occurred Jan. 25th, 1827. Geo. Goodrich, of Clinton, was born in Tecumseh Aug. 28, 1827. The Adrian resident must stand aside.

Hudson Gazette: Trustee Frensdorf, having got the consent of the holder of the last village bond to accept payment, at a saving to the village of a considerable portion of the interest, moved on Monday evening last, as will be seen by council proceedings, that said bond be paid. This action wipes out the last of the bonded debt of the village, and there is still a handsome balance of nearly $1,000 in the treasury. Tax-payers will appreciate this sort of financiering. The demand upon their pockets may be lessened one-third the coming year.

THE railroad work is progressing quietly but effectively this week.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

GLADNESS.

BY ALMO.

The world is full of gladness
To those who own its power,
It sparkles in the sunlight,
And blossoms in the flower;
It glances with the streamlet,
Adown the verdant hill,
And warbles with the wild bird
Amid the forest still.

It twinkles in the dew-drop
Within the lover's bell,
It breathes in gentle murmurs
Where the pure waters swell;
It dances in the tree-tops,
The clinging buds above,
And whispers in the zephyr
Like the soft breath of love.

Then why forever sorrow,
Though cares and grief are ours,
When every blissful morrow
Wakes fairer, brighter bowers?
While sweet and bountiful nature
Is redolent with joy,
We all may live in gladness,
Though grief and good alloy.

STARTING A PAPER.

A Story of Two of our Cleverest Humorists.

It was nearly twenty years ago when Dan De Quille and Mark Twain attempted to start a paper in Mendocino County. They took the type and material from their recently defunct newspaper establishment in San Francisco, and loading the stuff on a big wagon struck out into the country to retrieve their fortune. They packed their type just as it stood in the forms, tied up the articles with a stout cord by a process well known to printers, and packing them closely in boxes, vowed to establish a newspaper somewhere which would be the leading exponent of politics and history of the Pacific coast. Had not an unfortunate circumstance taken place it is evident that the newspaper which they contemplated founding would have been alive to-day. Their journey over the mountains was utterly uneventful until they reached Simpson's station, a spot well known to old travellers on that route. Here they met a party of emigrants making for Lower California, and the latter had with them a small mountain howitzer which they brought with them across the plains.

Twain took a great fancy to this gun and offered $50 for it, with two kegs of powder. The emigrants were glad enough to part with it, as they concluded the time for its use had passed.—Dan thought the purchase of the artillery and military supplies was a reckless piece of extravagance, and said as much, but Mark replied:

"When we start our paper we must fire a salute. A newspaper office with artillery has a big bulge on the business. No well regulated office in California should be without a howitzer. If a man comes in for a retraction we can blow him into the next county.—The howitzer goes."

This silenced argument and the next day the two journalists took the road with their printing outfit and artillery.

The next night they camped in a mountain ravine fifteen miles from Simpson's, and, after building the usual camp-fire, fell asleep. About eleven o'clock the horses awakened them by prancing about, and the two journalists were led to the conclusion that a party of Indians were making arrangements for a night attack. In the clear moonlight human forms could be distinguished about half a mile away, at the foot of the ravine.—The idea of encountering Indians had never entered the heads of the two fortune-seekers, and they had no arms. Suddenly Twain brightened up remarking:

"The howitzer!"

"We've got nothing but powder," said Dan.

"Well, powder'll scare 'em; and we'll load her up."

The piece was immediately loaded with a good big charge, and the two men felt quite certain that the Indians, hearing the roar of the gun, would beat an unconditional retreat. The piece was hardly loaded and placed in position when about forty of the red-skins came charging up the ravine.

Twain seized a brand from the camp-fire and was about to lay it on the touch-hole, when Dan yelled, hold on! as he rammed something into the mouth of the piece and remarked:

"Turn 'er loose."

The roar of the howitzer echoed through the lonely forest, and the savages, with frantic cries of pain, reeled down the ravine in wild confusion.

"What in hell did you put in?" asked Mark.

"A column of solid nonpareil and a couple of sticks of your spring poetry. It'll paralyze them."

"Frank Pixley on the Constitution"—half a column of leaded brevier.

If it hits 'em, the day is won.

Your leader on "Law and Order." Save it as a last resort.

Dan pulled the type out of the boxes and stuffed column after column in the howitzer's mouth as the savages came charging on. Another round from the gun, and the red-skins rolled over each other like boulders swept away by a mountain cloud burst.—Mark, in an ecstacy of delight, pulled an American flag out of his effects, nailed it to the tail board of the wagon, and was about to make a speech, when the dusky figures of the foes were once more seen moving to the attack.

The piece was again loaded, and this time with a double charge. Mark's leader on "Law and Order," the puff of an auction house, by Fred MCrollish, "as a sickner," Dan said; Frank Gross' verses on "The Rebel Yell;" an agricultural article by Sam Seabaugh, showing the chemical properties of corn-juice as an educational lever; a maiden poetical effort by Olive Harper, and some verses by Colonel Cremony and Frank Soule completed the load.

That poetry reaching 'em first will throw 'em into confusion, and my editorial coming on the heels of the rest will result in a last demoralization.—It will be like the last cavalry charge of the French troopers at the battle of Austerlitz.

For the third and last time the faithful howitzer belched its typographical compliments to the advancing foe. The havoc was terrible.—There was a wild yell from a score of savage throats, and then the low groans of the dying floated up the ravine on the gentle wind. The two men walked over the field of slaughter and counted fifty-six aboriginals lying in heaps. The bodies were horribly mutilated with the nonpariel, bourgeois, "caps," misery dashes and unassorted pi.

"My leader cooked that man's goose," said Mark, pointing to a savage hanging over the limb of a cedar.

My geological article did the business for him, rejoined Dan, nodding carelessly at an Indian, whose head was lying twenty yards away.

"The pen is mightier than the sword."

You bet. Hurrah for Faust and Guttenberg!

"Is there any type left?"

Not a pound.

Two days later the two journalistic tramps reached Virginia City, weary, discouraged and footsore, and secured places on the Enterprise.

A few days ago Dan received the following from his former partner:

HARTFORD, Conn., Jan. 1, 1880.

DEAR DAN: I send you the congratulations of the New Year. Do you recollect the time we exterminated the tribe of unlettered (?) savages in Mendocino county? If you can spare the time, I wish you would make a pilgrimage to that historic spot, gather the ghostly relics together, and plant a tablet (not too expensive, and at your own expense) to the memory of the departed. Have a shooting-stick lying across a long bow, with our monogram and coat-of-arms intwined, and some appropriate epitaph carved on the stone. An extract from Carl Schurz's views of the "Peace Policy" might do. Inclosed is $4.50 for you incidental expenses. You can dead-head traveling expenses.

Yours, MARK TWAIN.

P. S.—Send me a thigh-bone of the fallen chief by next express. M. T.

Dan will attend to the matter in the spring. The old howitzer used on the occasion is still in his possession.—Carson (Nev.) Appeal.

Feels Young Again.

"My mother was afflicted a long time with Neuralgia, and a dull, heavy, inactive condition of the whole system, headache, nervous prostration, and was almost helpless. No physicians or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters, with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over 70 years old.—We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family."—A lady, Providence, R. I.

A Quebec merchant has experimented successfully in shipping beef to England in the carcass. The animals are beheaded, the entrails are taken out and the bodies pressed into a small compass and frozen. The hide is not removed until the voyage is over, and it is claimed that the meat is superior in appearance to other imported beef, and keeps longer.

A Rochester Physician's Experience.

R. Calkins, M. D., of Rochester, N. Y., certifies Oct. 6th, 1879, that he has used the Safe Kidney and Liver Cure in his practice for diseases of the kidneys and liver, and the result has been satisfactory in the extreme. He says: "I would now prescribe the same remedy to all similarly afflicted, and you are at liberty to so state in your testimonials."

"Two heads are better than one," especially on the penny you "snap up."

HOW STEEL ENGRAVINGS ARE PRINTED.

A brief explanation of the method of producing steel plate engravings will be of general interest since a misapprehension exists in the majority of minds on this subject. The prevailing opinion seems to be that steel engravings are "struck off" by steam power at the rate of thousands per hour, very much as newspapers are printed.

Oil painting is the highest department in art. Next in order is the steel plate, and no other style of reproduction can compare with it in its grade of excellence.

In the first place the designer furnishes the subject to be engraved, usually in the form of an oil painting, and often at an expense to the publishers of thousands of dollars. The design is then engraved on a highly polished plate of steel about one-eighth of an inch thick. Skillful engravers must be employed in the process of engraving a creditable plate, often spending many months, or years of constant work in its completion, and frequently at an expense of many thousands of dollars.

However perfect the steel plate the engravings therefrom will have but little or no value to the critical eye unless well printed by a competent printer who has spent years in learning and mastering his art, so as to be able to perfectly produce the engraver's translation of the painter's thought.

The highest portions of the engraved plate produce the lights, and the deepest engraved parts the shadows or dark portions of the picture, which is the reverse of type printing. The steel plate is warmed over a furnace to facilitate the management of ink when spread thereon. A very fine and thick ink is rolled over and into the engraved portions with a hand roller, which is passed and repassed over the plate many times. The ink is then removed from the surface portions of the plate—first by the use of cloths—after which the naked hand more perfectly wipes the ink from the surface—some time is thus spent in polishing the plate, so that it may produce the desired grades of light so that if brilliant they shall be mellow and harmonize with its rich and expressive darker portions.

The plate is now removed from the furnace and placed upon the press made expressly for this kind of printing. A thick sheet of paper that has been wet for many hours is laid over the polished plate, and is passed thro' the press receiving a powerful pressure. The wet sheet with its pictured impression is carefully lifted from the plate, dried between mill boards, dry pressed, and prepared for market—the whole process requiring a number of days of skillful management. The warming, inking, wiping, polishing of plate, etc., must be repeated in printing each picture. No steam power or mechanical invention lifts the sheet from the press—all must be done by hand work.

It is a fair day's work for two men to print and prepare for market from ten to twenty-five copies of the largest size engravings. Thus it will be seen that after expending a large sum of money for paintings, and engraved plates, and waiting months or years for their completion, that the multiplication of creditable engravings is slow and expensive, and that their beauty and finish depends very much upon the skill of the printer; the importance of whose vocation has never been adequately appreciated by those not familiar with his department of art; nor by those who persist in having and paying for cheap work, and in flooding the country with execrable prints,—a dishonor to the painter and engraver.

When we fully understand the slow and costly process by which engravings of real merit are produced, and other facts in art, the more clearly will it be realized that the quality of work should regulate the price. Then the demand for pictures by the square yard with which to cover walls will entirely cease, and the quality and the soul of the work, and not the quantity will be the thing desired, and then many "palatial" as well as "cottage homes" will be more beautifully adorned.

NIAGARA.

The shades of night had blotted out the landscape long before we reached Niagara. The northwestern horizon, however, had been for some time illuminated by summer lightning, which soon became forked and very brilliant. As we crossed the suspension bridge, seeing nothing but a dim whiteness in the distance, a flash unusually long and vivid lit up the whole splendor of the Falls with its pallid and ghastly light.

There is perhaps no natural object in any part of the world which, when seen, answers so accurately to expectation as the Falls of Niagara. Pictures and photographs without end have made them familiar in every aspect in which they can be represented. Those in what they can not be represented are the last to be seen and the last to be appreciated. The first approach to them is perhaps the least imposing view of all. They are seen at the distance of about a mile. They are seen, too, from an elevation above the level of the top of the Falls, and the great breadth of the river, as compared with the height of the precipice, makes that height look comparatively small. Nevertheless, the effect of the whole, with the two great columns of spray from the "Horse-shoe," suddenly revealed by a flash of lightning, is an effect which can never be forgotten. The power and beauty of Niagara are best seen from the point on the Canadian bank whence the "Table-Rock" once projected.—This arises from the fact that the deepest convexity of the "Horse-shoe" is only well seen from that point, and it is along the edges of that convexity that the greatest mass of water falls, with an unbroken rush which is only to be seen here, and in the heaviest billows of the Atlantic when their crests rise transparent against the light.

The greens and blues of that rush are among the most exquisite colors in nature, and the lines upon it, which express irresistible weight and force, are as impressive as they are delicate and indefinable. The awfulness of the scene is much increased when the wind carries the spray-cloud over the spectator and envelopes him in its mists; because, while these are often thick enough wholly to conceal the foaming water at the bottom of the Falls, they are rarely thick enough to conceal the mighty leap of the torrent at the top. The consequence is that the water seems to be tumbling into a bottomless abyss—with a deafening roar, intensified by the same currents of air which carry the drenching spray.

I am inclined to think, however, that the most impressive of all the scenes at Niagara is one of which comparatively little is said. The river Niagara above the Falls runs in a channel very broad, and very little depressed below the general level of the country. But there is a steep declivity in the bed of the stream for a considerable distance above the precipice, and this constitutes what is called the Rapids. The consequence is, that when we stand at any point near the edge of the Falls, and look up the course of the stream, the foaming waters of the Rapids constitute the sky-line. No indication of land is visible—nothing to express the fact that we are looking at a river. The crests of the breakers, the leaping and the rushing of the waters, are all seen against the clouds, as they are seen in the ocean when the ship from which we look is in the "trough of the sea." It is impossible to resist the effect on the imagination. It is as if the fountains of the great deep were being broken up, and as if a new deluge were coming on the world. The impression is rather increased than diminished by the perspective of the low, wooden banks on either shore, running down to a vanishing-point and seeming to be lost in the advancing waters. An apparently shoreless sea tumbling toward one is a very grand and a very awful sight. Forgetting there what one knows, and giving one's self up to what one only sees. I do not know that there is anything in nature more majestic than the view of the Rapids above the Falls of Niagara.—Duke of Argyll, Frazer's Magazine.

KISSING SERVANT-GIRLS.

Bold Expression from Nevada Concerning the Danger to Preachers.

During the past few weeks a very unlady-like epidemic has broken out among the servant-girls. Hardly a day passes but that one of them, heretofore carrying a spotless reputation, is caught kissing a preacher. It seems strange that a servant-girl cannot know her place, and attend properly to the household duties entrusted to her care, without neglecting her work to take liberties with the unprotected preachers straying about the house alone. A servant who would deliberately take advantage of an innocent pastor should be utterly tabooed by the employment agencies and compelled to find her level. A minister of the Gospel, earnestly endeavoring to follow out the ramifications of the plan of salvation, is entitled to be protected in his own house, which is rightfully his castle. The hired help seem to be getting so emboldened by success that no divine is safe if his wife happens to walk out for a few moments. It is high time some law were passed in all the States clearly defining the duties of servants, and fixing penalties for overstepping the bounds of modesty. A preacher has scarcely any show whatever in the clutches of a bold, bad servant-girl, who cares little for her own character, and ignores the fact that she is sapping the foundation of religion and attacking the bulwarks which have surrounded the Christian faith for ages. The servant-girl should be suppressed, even if it takes an amendment to the Constitution to bring about the necessary reform. In a crisis like this the Church needs the strong arm of a great Government to protect it.—Carson Appeal.

Prize Butter at the N. Y. Fair.

There was a very fine display of extra choice butter at the International Dairy Fair. The packages that took the prizes were splendid samples of what gilt edge butter ought to be perfect in quality and color. Many of them were colored to a perfect June tint with Wells, Richardson & Co.'s Perfected Butter Color, the use of which was universally recommended both by the makers and the butter buyers.

Employment for Ladies.

The Queen City Suspender Company, of Cincinnati, are now manufacturing and introducing their new Stocking Supporters for Ladies and Children and their unequalled Skirt Suspenders for Ladies. None should be without them; our leading physicians recommend them, and are loud in their praise. This manufacturing establishment is managed by ladies who have made the wants of ladies and children a study, and they ask us to refer them to some reliable and energetic lady to introduce them in this county, and we certainly think that an earnest solicitation in every household would meet with a ready response, and that a determined woman could make a handsome salary and have the exclusive agency for this county. We advise some lady who is in need of employment to send a postal card to the Company, with her name and address, and mention this paper. Address, Queen City Suspender Company, Nos. 147 & 149 West Fourth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

HIGHLY PERFUMED.

The strongest and purest Lye made. Will make 12 pounds of the best Perfumed Hard Soap in 20 minutes without boiling.
The best water-softener made.
The best disinfectant.
The following are some of the advantages obtained by using Lewis' 98 Per Cent. Powdered Lye:

First. It is packed from iron can with a tight or removable lid, easily taken off and leaving the contents exposed, thereby saving the trouble, annoyance, and danger (from flying particles), as with other Lyes, which, being sold in tin cans, must be broken with a hammer to get the Lye out.
Second. It being a fine powder, you can remove the lid and pour out all the contents, being always ready for use.
Third. A teaspoonful or more can be used, as in water-softening, scrubbing, etc., and the lid returned to the can, and thereby save the balance of contents. With other Lyes all must be dissolved at once and used in a short time, or the strength is gone.
Fourth. Absolute purity. Free from all adulterations.

Ninth. This Lye is 2 per cent. stronger than any other Lye or Potash.
Tenth. One to two teaspoonfuls will soften a tub of the hardest water.
Eleventh. One teaspoonful will thoroughly cleanse Sinks, Drains, or Closets.

Rupture

DR. J. A. SHERMAN—IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY DR. SHERMAN known to the public for the past 35 years or more through his successful method of treating Rupture without the annoyance and injury trusses inflict. His system of cure is by local external application.
No man is safe who has a rupture, no matter how insignificant he may consider it; for every man who has died from it once flattered himself that it was but a trifling ailment; and every man who now suffers from it and the injury of trusses, to such an extent that life has no enjoyments, once regarded it as unworthy special attention. It is not a stand-still affliction; it is progressive, even onto death. References given to gentlemen in the city, who have been cured. During treatment no hindrance from labor. Patients from abroad can receive treatment and leave for home same day.

HIS BOOK ON RUPTURE

gives the most reliable proofs from distinguished professional gentlemen, clergymen and merchants his successful practice and popularity therefrom throughout this country and the West Indies.
The afflicted should read it and inform themselves of the certainty of being cured.
It is illustrated with photographic likenesses of extremely bad cases before and after cure, and mailed to those who send 10 cents. Save this, and remember in writing or calling the address is

CAUTION—The reputation of Dr. J. A. SHERMAN, attained from 40 years successful practice has started around the country Pretenders who assume to be the original Dr. Sherman famous for the cure of Rupture. Two of these parties an old and young man recently turned up in Boston; they duped several by their Fraudulent Advertisements; when detected, suit was brought, but the fellows ran away leaving sorrowful victims, room rent, board bills and newspapers unpaid. Since then they have been discovered at 241 Broadway, New York, where they recently, by base deceptions defrauded an aged Clergyman.

BENSONS CAPCINE | CAPCINE | POROUS PLASTER

A WORD TO THOSE WHO USE POROUS PLASTERS. It is a universally acknowledged fact that

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters are Superior to all Others.

The great demand for them has caused a number of unscrupulous parties to make and sell worthless imitations under similar sounding names. As the market is flooded with inferior plasters selling at any price it is important for the consumer to know which is the best. It is well known that some of the cheap plasters have been examined and found to contain injurious ingredients which make them dangerous to use, causing paralysis and other diseases. CAUTION—See that the word CAPCINE on each plaster is correctly spelled.

THE TARIFF ON TYPE.

Among the many foes of cheap reading matter is the tariff on printing type. The manufacture of printing type in this country is controlled by a few large firms, and their combined influence has succeeded in keeping up an exorbitant duty upon an article which is one of the chief items of expense in every printing office. There is no good reason why the type founders should not sell type at a reduction of at least twenty-five per cent from its present price and yet make a handsome profit. In 1873, this matter was brought to the notice of the public by Geo. P. Rowell & Co. and the agitation then commenced by them forced the ring into a reduction of twenty per cent on the price list previously in force. In 1878, the united action of the printing fraternity compelled another reduction. A movement is on foot by the type founders' ring to restore the old price list or an advanced rate, while a counter movement has been started to place type on the free list. In their effort to increase the duty, the type founders' ring will discover that they have overshot the mark. The newspaper press of the country should unitedly raise their voice against the imposition, and it will be heard in Congress. Let the agitation go on, let the iniquitous character of this duty on type be fully exposed, and it will result in placing type upon the free list before the present Congress closes.

HEADLIGHT FLASHES.

What are the prospects for the new railroad? We suppose our readers will expect a definite answer to this question this week. Our reply is that the status remains unchanged. The Tecumseh and Addison line still has the inside track, and the canvass is progressing successfully in Franklin, Tecumseh and Ridgeway. Work is also being done, however, on the projected lines both north and south of us, and it will not do for our people to indulge in over confidence. There is considerable work yet to be done to insure absolute success. A few men of means in this village must come down, and the farmers must show their faith by their works. At the present writing the farmers are sadly behind in this work, and they must expect to take hold of this enterprise with more vigor and liberality if we would carry it through. The success or failure of the project substantially rests on their shoulders to-day. A few days more will settle the question one way or the other beyond a doubt.

THE UNIVERSITY ROBBERY.

Ex-Regent Grant has issued a reply to Beal's supplement, entitled "A Condensed History of the Great Robbery in Michigan University." It is a careful review of the entire controversy, and shows up the Beal conspiracy in its true light. It makes it as plain as noon-day what many people have long believed, that the University was made the victim of a bitter personal quarrel in this entire squabble, and that the University in the end has been the loosing party. The institution has lost two of its ablest professors, has been swindled out of several thousand dollars, has had its fair name disgraced, and all to gratify the personal spite and animosity of one man who has no official connection with the University whatever. Those newspapers which fed their readers with Beal's supplement, should now give them a dose of Col. Grant's review as an antidote.

A. M. PURDY, of Palmyra, N. Y., sends postpaid and free to all applicants his valuable 24-page Catalogue of Fruits and Flowers, giving kinds, description, mode of planting, &c. He also sends a free specimen copy of The Fruit Recorder and Cottage Gardner, a monthly at $1.00 per year, devoted to fruits and flowers—it speaks for itself; while 25 cents will get his 64-page Small fruit instructor—a work pronounced by all who have seen it, the most concise and practical of any yet printed. Persons sending to him now will get the Catalogue, and the Fruit Recorder for 1880, and the Small Fruit Instructor, all post-paid, for only One Dollar. He accepts postage stamps for odd change.

AMONG OUR EXCHANGES.

Curles Sweeter Than Ever.

Philadelphia Times.—Senator Conkling's hair curls sweeter than ever since the Utica Convention.

Leads to Reflection.

Philadelphia Times.—In their efforts to nominate Grant the third-term people seem to have the pretty unanimous sympathy of the Democratic press. This naturally leads to more or less real serious reflection.

Blaine's Best Hold.

Chicago News.—If Senator Blaine is wise he will employ Jay Gould to pull his wires for him. Mr. Gould is now in the business of wire-pulling against the Western Union Telegraph Company and the courts of the country.

Tilden's Manifesto.

New York Tribune.—It is announced that Mr. Tilden will issue a manifesto presently defining his position. This is unnecessary. That dispatch to Cincinnati for 200 rooms and 60 parlors is of itself a very able manifesto.

The State for the Widows.

Detroit Free Press.—It is only in Kentucky that the widow finds her true sphere. In that State, provided she is white, and has a child between 6 and 20 years of age, she has the right to vote in person or by proxy at all school elections.

Party Harmony.

New York Tribune.—The Grant managers talk a great deal about party harmony, and it is a most excellent and necessary thing, but doesn't it look sometimes as if the anti-Grant Republicans were called upon to do the "heft" of the harmonizing?

The Great Brain Center.

Kansas City Mail.—Cincinnati is the best place in the United States to hold a National Convention. No other city is equally convenient and accessible to all sections. No other city can offer so grand a hall or better accommodations for a large assemblage. And besides Ohio is the great brain-center for American statesmanship anyhow.

Where is the Plumed Knight?

Cincinnati Enquirer.—Here is our old friend De Lesseps junketing around New York with a lot of choice spirits, revealing his plans for the Darien Canal and cracking jokes at the Monroe Doctrine, while the Plumed Knight sits supinely in the Senate and never once calls on the American Eagle to scream!

Uncle Sammy is the Man.

Columbus Dispatch.—There are persons who believe that the selection of Cincinnati as the place for holding the National Democratic Convention means a "boom" for that great Ohio man, Hugh J. Jewett. The other candidates may have just as many booms as they choose, but in the end Uncle Sammy will gobble up the nomination, boom or no boom.

Senator Conkling's Reliance.

Adrian Times.—In considering Senator Conkling's estimate of any candidate's ability to carry the state of New York for the Republicans, it would be well to bear in mind that Mr. Conkling's candidate for Governor would have been defeated by twenty thousand majority, but for Tammany's bolt from the Democratic nominee. Does Mr. Conkling depend on another Tammany bolt to carry the state for his Presidential candidate?

Rutherford's Confession.

Buffalo Courier.—When Mrs. Hayes, tying her night-cap strings with a snap, remarks to Rutherford, "How stupid it was of you to promise that you would not accept a second term before you had even got the first!" he meekly answers, "My dear, I wanted, in the language of the ungodly, to see the Father of his Country and go one better; in future generations my example will become the unwritten law of the land."

Stop the Leaks.

New York Sun.—The Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives no doubt intend honestly to reduce all unnecessary expenditures, and to go on with the work which was begun in the Forty-fourth Congress. With a President in earnest for reform, it would not be difficult to bring down the actual cost of carrying on the Government by twenty-five and perhaps thirty millions a year. The army, the navy, and the whole field of the civil service, invite the stern hand of retrenchment.

A Democratic Love Feast.

New York Herald.—The Butler and Abbott wings of the democratic party in Massachusetts have kissed and made up. According to the reports the peace overtures were made by the Butler wing of the party. For several years past the Essex statesman has been in the habit of likening himself to a widow who fully knew her own mind and was not afraid to give expression to her sentiments. Being leap year the "Widow" Butler has proposed, been accepted, and now everything is lovely in the democratic family of the old Bay State. The event is of course significant in the politics of Massachusetts.

The Popular Science Monthly for March.

"The Popular Science Monthly" for March is rich in the variety of its contributions, but is especially strong in the direction of education. In this field it is doing a most important public work, its educational papers being abler and more advanced in their treatment of principles than those contained in journals professionally devoted to the subject. The first article in the March number is a brilliant discussion, by Dr. William James, on "The Association of Ideas."

By the sinner and saint when it comes to their door.

THE Brown street social was held at the residence of H. M. Star on last Saturday evening, and all report having had a good time.

MRS. BOISE, of Grand Rapids, missionary of the State temperance society, will lecture at Macon Grange Hall, Sunday evening, March 7th, at 7½ o'clock. All are invited.

A Card of Thanks.

To the Board and Patrons of Macon School District No. 2:—Please accept our thanks for your kindness to our son during the school term just closed, which has seemed to renew the partial acquaintance of sixteen years ago, and will make each familiar name doubly dear to us in the future.

MR. AND MRS. L. G. LESTER.

Adrian Journal: Modern "bumming," so-called, is becoming quite prevalent in our midst. Last Friday night certain young men of this city were loafing the streets in a disorderly manner. The law, as it now stands, prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors to minors, but still young men under 18 are able to procure enough to render them unfit for respectable society.

Good Templars.

The second meeting of the Good Templar's Lodge will be held to-morrow evening at 7 o'clock in the Reform Club hall. As the charter will be open until after this meeting, it is hoped that all former Good Templars, and others who may wish to join will be present to help on the good work. Please let this be considered not only a public but also a personal invitation and request. Initiation fees, males 75 cents, females 50 cents.

CORPORATION ELECTION.

The village election passed off very quietly last Monday, and only 182 votes were polled, which is less than half the voting strength of the corporation. The regular ticket was chosen by a very decisive majority. A people's ticket appeared in the field early in the day, but the candidates thereon all publicly declined, as their names had been used without their knowledge and they did not wish to antagonize the regular ticket, which was an excellent one in every respect. Following are the persons chosen:

President—Wm. C. Fitzsimmons.
Recorder—Peter S. McKinnon.
Trustees, two years—Charles Burridge, Adelbert W. Mills, Henry Smith.
Trustee, one year, to fill vacancy—Jeremiah Root.
Treasurer—Charles A. Slayton.
Assessors—Horatio Keyser, Alfred James.

MICHIGAN TEACHERS' INSTITUTES.

The Lenawee County Institute for 1880, by appointment of the Superintendent of Public Instruction, will be held in Tecumseh, March 29–April 2. The purposes of this Institute are to afford facilities to teachers for becoming better qualified for their work and to enlist the sympathies of citizens more fully in behalf of public school education. All who are directly connected with the public schools are personally responsible for its success and are urged to attend its sessions. The lectures, both day and evening, are absolutely free to all. Many of them are the first of a series, and are necessary to a full understanding of those that are to follow. Therefore let all resolve to take the entire course. The citizens of Tecumseh are expected to provide suitable accommodations for the teachers who may be in attendance. The Superintendent of Public Instruction, in his circular, says: "While it is not thought desirable to burden the people by making the entertainment entirely free, yet boarding places should be secured in advance of the Institute for as many as will probably be in attendance, at rates as favorable to the teachers as possible." It is probable that both day and evening sessions will be held in the Opera House. Further particulars hereafter.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., MAR. 4, 1880.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

TOM COWLEY, of Dundee, was in town on a visit the first of the week.

THE Ada Gray dramatic troupe will play at Adrian on the 10th and 11th.

MRS. A. BLACKMAN expects to return to her home in Colorado the last of the month.

SEVERAL Tecumseh people attended the Remenyi concert at Adrian last Monday evening.

THE Times says it is not improbable that Adrian will have the best base ball club in the State the coming season.

MR. ROBERT LEWERS, a resident of the Sandwich Islands was in Tecumseh last Saturday, the guest of G. P. Sparks.

AN extra car was attached to the down train Tuesday afternoon last for the Champion Reaper & Mower Agts. excursion.

THE annual meeting of the Opera House Association will be held at the Secretary's office on Monday, March 15th, at one o'clock in the afternoon.

JERRY ROOT has received the appointment of District Deputy for the Odd Fellows' Lodge and Encampment of this village for the present year.

ON the farmers' page, this week, will be found an article on the over production of wheat, taken from the N. Y. Sun. It will repay a careful perusal.

WHO is the San Francisco friend from whom we frequently receive California papers? We should be pleased to find him out, so we may return the compliment.

THE exhibition that was to have taken place at Grange Hall, Macon, on Tuesday, 9th, has been indefinitely postponed on account of sickness.—Further notice will be given in due time as to when it will be held.

T. G. MEAD, of Raisin, sold on Monday last to Hanford & Anthony 160 fine wool sheep, which averaged 128 pounds each in weight. They were fed on his farm and he would like to know whether any one in this section can do better.

WOULDN'T it be a good plan to publish a full list of the subscribers to the Toledo & Milwaukee R. R. in Tecumseh, in next week's HERALD?—Whether we secure the road or not there are a good many people who would like to know who the friends of the project are.

Adrian Times: "Detroit lacks only $90,000 of having the $200,000 bonus in aid of the Detroit and Butler road. It might be well for the business men along the line of the proposed road to cut out the lists of the subscribers to the Detroit bonus and put them away for future reference." An excellent suggestion.

PROF. W. H. PAYNE, who fills the new chair of Education at the University of Michigan, has sent out circulars informing school officers that he has the names of several experienced teachers who desire situations in public schools the coming season. Inquiries for teachers sent to him will receive prompt attention.

Detroit Evening News: The Tecumseh HERALD argues in favor of the nomination of J. J. Woodman for governor, on the grounds that he is a talented, clever, good-looking and well-built man.

The News is quite complimentary to our Lake Ridge correspondent.—Well, either party could go further and fare worse than to take Mr. Woodman for Governor.

A CHILDREN'S Entertainment will be given at the Opera House to-morrow evening under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church. The program will consist of music, recitations, and dialogues, "Carl Celestes' Concert Troupe," the "Quilting at Mrs. Jones," and other equally interesting selections. Let everybody go and hear the little folks.

Adrian Times: The county surveyor, Mr. G. E. Kedzie, has resigned, and Mr. James Blair, of Morenci, has been appointed in his stead. Mr. Blair's commission is dated February 27th. Of the new surveyor, it is only necessary to say that he is thoroughly competent, and bears the best reputation in the locality where he is best known. The people of the county are to be congratulated on securing the services of so excellent an official in place of one of the best surveyors in the state, Mr. Kedzie.

MR. A. P. CODDINGTON has just issued his annual poultry circular. This year he is breeding Plymouth Rocks and Langshans. His strain of Plymouth Rocks has attained a high reputation, and he is considered one of the most successful breeders of this variety of fowls in the West. He has lately purchased some of the Langshans, a variety of fowl recently introduced in this section. They are a deep jet black and a very beautiful fowl, and Mr. Coddington thinks they are destined to have a big run among poultry fanciers.

THE Ada Gray troupe is coming.

FRED BURLINGAME has taken a position in Wright's Drug store.

BILLY JORDAN is making himself useful in helping along minor improvements.

MR. E. C. SMITH and wife, of Toledo, spent last Sabbath in Tecumseh, visiting with friends.

NEW steps have been placed on the stairs leading to Dr. House's and De Mott & Baxter's offices.

MR. M. P. BROWN, of this village, is making arrangements to start a photograph gallery at Clinton.

THE children's entertainment at the Opera House to-morrow evening will commence at 7:30, sharp.

THE Universalist Social will meet to-morrow afternoon and evening at the residence of Albert Hyde, Sr.

THE Masquerade ball at Clinton on Monday evening last was a grand success. There were over one hundred masquers.

THE Baptists of this village propose to go into the organ business as well as the Presbyterians. They have bargained for a $1000 organ for their church.

The State Teachers' Institute for Lenawee county will be held this spring in Tecumseh, commencing on Monday, March 29th, and continuing five days.

THE opening party of Billy Burch, at the old Drew House in Blissfield was largely attended last Tuesday evening. Over one hundred couples were present.

MR. WILL C. BURNS, of Hillsdale, Mich., called at our sanctum yesterday. He is spending three or four days in Tecumseh as the guest of Mr. Mahlon Sherd.

E. GRAY has received this week three large orders for flour, corn, and corn meal from Ireland. One came from Sligo, one from Londonderry and one from Enniskillen.

ALL members of Tecumseh Lodge, No. 69, F. & A. M. are requested to attend the next regular communication March 26th, as matters of importance will come before the Lodge.

THE case of Geo. Bangs vs. the L.S. & M. S. R. R. Co., for damages is on trial at Adrian to-day. Several Tecumseh people went over to Adrian yesterday as witnesses in the case.

CORPORATION elections were held last Monday in Blissfield, Morenci, Hudson and Tecumseh. Non-partisan tickets were elected in all but Hudson, where the Republican ticket was elected with two exceptions.

THE Adrian Press thinks that if Tecumseh cannot raise money enough to build a new railroad that we should devote our surplus funds towards building a canal through Tom Boyd's dam highway obstruction west of the village.

THE following is the program of the Tecumseh High School Lyceum for Monday evening, Mar. 8, 1880:

Inst. Music—Elida James.
Recitation—Hettie McClue.
Select Reading—Mana Walker.
Declamation—Wallie Peters.
Song—Jennie Anthony.
Question—Resolved, That fear has more influence over the mind than hope.
Affirmative—Martin Wilson, Estella Miller, Will Aten.
Negative — John Whelan, Anna Robbins, Elmer Hendershot.
Song—Elsie Fowler.
Critic—Sarah Toland.

Adrian Times, Mar. 3: Geo. Bains, of Ogden, yesterday made what was evidently an unsuccessful attempt to commit suicide, by shooting himself through the head, with a small revolver. The ball, however, only went through the skin and flattened out on the skull, upon which it made sufficient impression to produce unconsciousness. Dr. Reynolds, of Palmyra, was called to attend the wounded man, and probed for and took out the ball, and expects a speedy recovery from the effects of the shooting, unless inflammation of the brain should ensue.

MISS ADA GRAY.

Tecumseh's favorite, Miss Ada Gray, will appear at the Opera House on Friday evening of next week, March 12th. The play to be presented is "Ruth Tredgett, the Tramp." Miss Gray will be supported by Watkins' Fifth Avenue Combination, which has been reorganized and is now a very strong troupe. Popular prices will be charged, only 25 and 35 cents. The Cincinnati Commercial speaks of the play as follows:

"Miss Ada Gray as Ruth Tredgett exhibited genuine power and feeling and made her points with telling effect. In the very first act, where she is dragged as a thief and a vagabond before Dr. Athelney and Mrs. Van Burgh, she displays the ferocity of a tigress, but when she melted before the kindly words of Mrs. Van Burgh, every heart was touched and the beauty of charity was most effectively demonstrated. Later in her scene with Smailey, where she recognizes the scoundrelly hypocrites, her rude dialect was like a whip of scorpions, and in her defense of her mistress was eloquent in its very uncouthness. She bore herself admirably through the entire play, and was twice called before the curtain in response to the enthusiastic plaudits of the audience. Her dialect is unusually good, and her character a very strong one."

A TRIP THROUGH THE SOUTH.

Lucius Lilley, Esq., has returned from his tour through the Southern States, having been gone from home just three weeks. Upon leaving home he took the route to Toledo and thence to Cincinnati. After stopping a day or two there, he proceeded to Louisville, and thence to Nashville and from there to Montgomery, Alabama. Here he made a short stay, visited Gov. Cobb, and the spot where Jeff Davis was inaugurated President of the Southern Confederacy. He then went to Mobile and thence to New Orleans. The most rapid railroad traveling on his entire trip he experienced on this line; the express train west of Mobile went 119 miles in about the same number of minutes. After staying a few days at New Orleans, he proceeded by Gulf steamer to Galveston and then by rail to Austin and Houston, Texas. At Austin he visited a cousin whom he had not seen since they were boys together. Returning to New Orleans by the same route, he proceeded by the Ohio & Mississippi to St. Louis and from there via Toledo to Tecumseh. His trip was a very pleasant one from first to last and nothing occurred to mar his enjoyment of it. While he was at Mobile and New Orleans the average temperature was about 80° in the middle of the day, and he had plenty of those Southern luxuries, strawberries and musquitoes. The State of Texas is developing rapidly. There are plenty of good business openings there for energetic, industrious young men, in which they can get a start and "grow up with the country." Mr. Lilley's opinion is that in a social and business point of view, the Southern people are improving. They are turning their attention more to agricultural and business pursuits and less to politics, in other words they are beginning to raise "more cotton and less hell." In the cities the negroes are improving in intelligence and industry quite rapidly, but in the back country on the large sugar and cotton plantations they are still very inferior and the "poor white trash" is no better. Mr. Lilley returns home well satisfied with his journey, and ready to attack his business duties with renewed energy.

SINK'S HOTEL.

Mr. W. H. Sink is now fairly settled in his new quarters, formerly the Merchants' Hotel, and is prepared to accommodate all the guests that may favor him with a call. We made a tour of the house yesterday and were surprised to see the elegant manner in which it had been fitted up. The rooms have all been repapered or kalsomined, and the wood work of the interior has been repainted. The barroom has been transformed into a reading room, which is a very creditable change. Mr. Sink proposes to run a first-class hotel without selling whiskey. The wash room has been enlarged, and window-doors placed in position leading to the dining-room which makes the latter room light enough. It was rather dark before.—The parlors up-stairs have been elegantly papered and furnished, and the office below reminds one of a hotel office in Detroit or Toledo. Mr. Sink has given special attention to the furnishing of his bed rooms. He has purchased all new furniture for this purpose. The bedsteads are most of them "three-quarter" size, which were made at Slayton's factory in this village, and he has procured wire-woven spring beds and mattresses made to order and new quilts, spreads, pillows and sheets, for every bed in the house.

The kitchen department of the house will be managed on the same general plan as heretofore, and which has given Mr. Sink the reputation of being one of the best landlords in this section of the State.

Mr. G. H. Martin, who was for two years connected with the American House, at Toledo, is the new clerk. He has a wide acquaintance among the traveling public, and will be a valuable acquisition to the employees of the House.

Friend Sink is now well fixed and we wish him plenty of guests and lots of business, for we know then he will be happy.

PROF. JOSEPH ESTABROOK, Principal of the State Normal School has been visited with a double affliction. On the 19th of January he lost his wife, Kate M. Estabrook, and upon the 23d his daughter Alice followed her mother to the silent tomb. Prof. Estabrook has scores of friends in his old home in Tecumseh and Franklin, who will deeply sympathize with him in his terrible bereavement. A memorial slip has been printed containing the death notices, account of the funeral services, a synopsis of the sermons preached, etc., in a convenient shape for preservation.

THE S. F. S. of District No. 1, in Raisin will give a Boston Tea Party on Thursday evening, March 11th.—The entertainment will consist of music, recitations, fish-ponds, &c., and an old fashioned supper will be served at 20 cents per couple. All are invited.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Samuel Kimball.

It is seldom indeed that the town of Franklin has been called to mourn the departure to the "other shore" of a woman so universally beloved as was Mrs. Samuel Kimball—one whose death may so truly be called a public bereavement. Not only is her own home made desolate, her family left sorrowing, but in the church and society of which she has long been a loved and honored member, a great space is left vacant. Her sudden death has called forth many expressions of tender regard and appreciation, and those who knew her longest and most intimately mourn for her as for a sister. Indeed, we do not think she had an enemy in the world, and every one who became acquainted with her was from that moment her friend. In many respects she was truly a remarkable woman; resolute in her convictions, firm in adherence to right, tireless in the performance of every known duty, always hopeful and cheerful, always able to see the "silver lining" to the most forbidding clouds, genial, hospitable, charitable, unselfish. These were the cardinal virtues which made up her noble character, and the last sums up the whole—unselfish. Always ready to contribute time, labor and strength in devotion to her friends or the church, or in caring for the sick or unfortunate. Her bereaved husband, upon whom the blow has fallen with crushing force, has truly said of her: "self was never with her a motive of action; she was always ready to sacrifice self for the benefit of others," and adds: "her deeds and motives will never be fully known and appreciated until the book of remembrance spoken of by Malachi shall be opened before the assembled multitude."

"I was sick and ye visited me."

How many will apply that sweet text to her, as they recall her faithful care of the sick in their own households; her timely practical suggestions; her tact and quiet self-possession; her willing sacrifice of rest and personal comfort; her pleasant surprises of delicacies to tempt an invalid's appetite, and all done so quietly and tenderly that one could scarcely express their gratitude in words. How well we remember it all. As the soldiers of the Crimea turned to watch the form and kiss the shadow of the noble Florence Nightingale, so our memory reaches back over the lapse of years, to clasp the image of our beloved friend, whose gentle ministries can never be forgotten. Dear, constant, life-long friend, farewell. Life has few friendships so true, so enduring, and so precious. "She hath her reward" in the land where sin and sickness never enter.

We learn that in October last Mrs. Kimball had an attack of paralysis, from which, however, she soon recovered so far as to be able to attend to her usual household work. On the morning of Dec. 29th, she was apparently well, but about ten o'clock complained of severe pain in her head and lay down. When her husband came to her bedside she said, "I'll be better soon," but shortly after became unconscious, and remained in that condition, without moving a limb, until the afternoon of the 31st, when she peacefully fell into dreamless sleep. It would have given the loving friends who watched for returning consciousness, untold satisfaction to have received some parting messages, but there is comfort in the assurance that her death was painless. The physicians called her disease apoplexy. She was sixty-seven years of age. We know little of her family friends, except that three sisters survive her, one of whom, Mrs. Whittlesey, remains with Mr. Kimball in the broken home. And so, with the old year, ended a life that was full of nobleness, and worth, and a career that was bright with the good she had done, and full of examples to those of us who stay yet a little longer. Her companion, who through all these years aided and encouraged her in all her labors of love and charity, and is now left alone in his advanced years, feeling that "the light of the home has gone out," has the confidence and esteem of his entire circle of acquaintance, as he certainly has also their sincerest sympathy in his great sorrow.

H. M. D.

DIED

LINDSLEY—On Thursday, Feb. 12, 1880, at her home in Saline township, Mrs. Rachel Lindsley, aged 73.

The deceased was born in County Antrim, Ireland. When fourteen years of age she came to this country and lived for several years at Groveland, Livingston county, N. Y. In the winter of 1834 she was united in marriage to Mr. Samuel Lindsley, whom she survived nearly twenty-four years. In the month of June, 1834, they came to the Territory of Michigan, settling at once on the farm which has since been their home. At the time of their settlement, an almost unbroken forest occupied all this region. Faithfully did the departed mother bear her part in the struggle of those early years. The fruits of those struggles she was long permitted to enjoy, and while her life's sun was slowly sinking, she was privileged to taste the comforts that are afforded by an affectionate family and a happy home.

At last she fell asleep, sustained unto the end by the Christian's faith and cheered by the Christian's hope.

The funeral services on Saturday, Feb. 14th, were attended by a very large number of neighbors and friends and were conducted by Rev. J. A. De Spelder, of Macon.

And now, farewell!
Thy latest word of love is spoken,
Thy last good-by, alas, is said;
How we deplore our circle broken,
And mourn thee gathered with the dead.

No tongue can tell,—
O, lonely is our home without thee,
We miss thy long familiar face;
In thought we gather fond about thee,
But thought alone can find thy place

And yet, 'tis well!
For thou hast soared on angel pinions
Above the shades of mortal night.
Thy spirit reigns in heaven's dominions,
Thy spirit basks in glory-light,
And all is well.

COM

Go and see the little folks at the Opera House to-morrow evening.

RAILROAD NOTES.

A large railroad meeting was held at the Opera House in this village last Friday afternoon, at which the enthusiasm was worked up to fever heat. Over $2,000 were added to the subscription list unconditionally, and several hundred dollars more were pledged conditionally. Mr. J. S. Strong offered to be one of ten men to double his subscription. J. B. Swan for himself and also for N. M. Sutton made the same offer. Jehiel Davidson followed suit and so did John Hanley, making five men who would double up, if five more would do so. A portion of the remaining five have been promised, and the committee expect to secure ten names on that basis before the expiration of this week.

On Saturday afternoon another meeting was held at the Opera House, and a few hundred dollars more were taken.

Saturday afternoon a meeting was also held at Ridgeway. There was a fair attendance at the meeting and an excellent spirit was manifested. Several hundred dollars extra were pledged at the meeting and we understand that the committee have taken several new subscriptions during the week thus far.

The work in Franklin is still progressing satisfactorily and they are steadily working up their quota.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

Producing Rain by Artificial Means—Dr. Mary Walker—A Jolly Dinner Party.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 27, '80.

It has been tolerably lively in Washington this week, in a political sense at least, and the Democrats have had their little "boom" to the fore. The meeting of the Democratic National committee attracted hither numerous representatives of the party from all sections, resulting in considerable quickening of the party pulse and a stiffening of the spinal column of the Washington end. Evidently the Democrats here, in Congress and out, feel a great deal better than they did, which can only be accounted for upon the theory that contact with their brethren from the outside has infused new life and confidence. There was quite a contest over the selection of a place for holding the convention to nominate a candidate for President, but it was finally settled in favor of Cincinnati, with a pretty unanimous feeling that it was the best, and that the date, fixed about three weeks after the Republican Convention at Chicago, was good policy. I do not think the decision has any significance whatever as to candidates. It was not a victory or defeat for any of them in particular, and the only positive indication gathered from the general tenor of the talk among visitors was that of an undoubtedly strong opposition to Tilden.

The Senate Committee on Agriculture has lately been giving considerable attention to the subject of producing rainfall by artificial means. General Daniel Ruggles of Virginia, has been before them two or three times explaining his method, for which he has recently obtained a patent, and which consists of sending to the cloud realm cartridges of dynamite or smaller explosive materials, in skeleton balloons, and to explode them either by the fires, or by magneto electricity through little metallic wires connecting the balloons with the earth. General Ruggles, as the result of many years of study and investigation of this subject, claims that the diffused mists passing over arid regions or localities suffering from unusual dro'ght may readily be consolidated into rainfalls by concussions and vibrations thus artificially produced, and he has therefore suggested to the committee that Congress may provide a small appropriation for expenditure by the Commissioner of Agriculture to test the practicability of aiding the agricultural interests of the country in this manner. The committee has listened to General Ruggles' statement with much interest and requested him to prepare an amplified memorial on the subject.

One of the curiosities of Washington is Dr. Mary E. Walker, whose name and fame ought by this time to be known to the remotest quarters of the Union, for she has been much written about and every visitor to the Capitol asks to have her pointed out. She is a slim, undersized, short-haired, sober-faced woman, who wanders about the city and the Capitol, wearing the dress of a man, even to the boots and walking stick. She formerly assumed the bloomer costume, but has within a year or so past, adopted the male attire without reserve.

The Senate Pension Committee has just rejected this woman's application for an increase of pension. She sought at Chattanooga, in 1864, the position of Assistant Surgeon, but a board of medical officers, after examination, reported that her knowledge of medicine and surgery was very little, if any, more than that of the ordinary house-wife, and assigned her to duty as hospital nurse. The Union officers allowed her to wander outside the lines and to be taken prisoner, an arrangement having been made that she should act as a spy while in the hands of the enemy. She was gone about four months, and upon her return the War Department allowed her $80 per month for her services. She was then employed a few months in the female prisoners' hospital at Louisville, receiving $100 per month. She then claimed that insufficient food and exposure while she had been a prisoner had affected her eyesight. Upon this ground she was allowed a pension of $8.50 per month, which she now receives, although the examining surgeon expresses some doubt as to whether weakness of the applicant's eyes was caused by exposure, or was the usual accompaniment of advancing age.

The House Ways and Means Committee gave a dinner last Saturday evening to two of its members, Garfield, and Gibson of La., who have just been elected to the Senate. It was a jolly affair and Randolph Tucker, the most facinating table-talker in Congress, surpassed himself on that occasion. Mr. Tucker, who is inimitable in the narration of humerous anecdotes, in which he shows much dramatic talent, so excited the admiration of Judge Kelly that he exclaimed: "I declare, Tucker, you are as great a man as I am. I have heard all the best comedians, but I never heard your equal." DOM PEDRO.

He clung to the frightened team while they ran some distance, and then losing his hold he fell and the wagon passed over his legs, breaking both bones between the knee and ankle, the ends of the fractured bones protruding through the flesh. The injuries are of a very painful nature, and to a man of Mr. Heisrodt's age are more serious and dangerous than ordinary.

THE FARMERS' PAGE.

OUR OVERPRODUCTION OF WHEAT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: The newspapers of this country are filled with articles that may be classed as national, congratulatory. They are of one tenor. All mention, exultantly, our export of breadstuffs.—Without exception they predict a profitable future for American agriculture.

Let us look into this promised prosperity. Take the business of growing wheat, for example, as that is the latest craze in the agricultural States of the Mississippi Valley. To wagering on the future price of this grain the farmers of a nation have staked their lands and happiness.

Thousands of men have worked steadily, since the first of last May, on the prairies of the West and Southwest, getting the virgin soil in condition for the seed. It is not an exaggeration to say that in the States of Nebraska, Kansas, and Texas over a million acres of prairie sod have been turned over, fitted, and sown to wheat this past season. In the same States the acreage that winter wheat was harvested from last summer has been resown, and very large additions have been made to it from spring-wheat, corn, oats, and barley lands. The men who have done the greater part of this immense work depend on the crop of 1880 for their future prosperity. If disaster overtakes the crop or the price be low, they are ruined. Those that have railroad lands will be unable to meet their payments. Those who have homesteads or entries will be forced to prove up and mortgage their lands.

To raise an acre of wheat costs as follows—assume the yield to be twenty bushels per acre:

Ploughing	$1
Harrowing, twice
1½ bushels seed wheat at 75c per bushel	1
Drilling
Cutting, binding, shocking, and stacking	2 0
Threshing 20 bushels at 7c per bushel	1 4
Hauling to market, an average distance of 15 miles, at 5c per bushel	1 0
Wear and tear and interest per acre	93
Total per acre	$8 00
Total per bushel	49

Under the most skillful management it costs forty cents to raise and market a bushel of wheat when the yield is twenty bushels per acre. The average crop is seldom fifteen bushels per acre. At that yield the cost is a fraction over fifty cents per bushel. The cost of production is as low as it can possibly be. The probabilities are that it will cost more to produce wheat in the future than it has in the few years last past, as the revived manufacturing interests are giving employment to many men who otherwise would be working on farms.

In 1878 there was a shortage in the wheat crop of Europe. We, from our abundance, spared them during the twelve months ending June last, 122,353,936 bushels of wheat of the value of $130,701,079—an average of $1.06 per bushel. The $1.06 received for the wheat does not represent the price paid to the farmer. The producer received $1.06 less the transportation charges for from 700 to 1,700 miles; less the elevator charges, commissions of middle-men, and inspection charges. These combined charges are so excessive that throughout Kansas wheat sold in the months of September and October, 1878, at from 49 cents to 60 cents per bushel for sound, bright No. 2 of the St. Louis grade. The charges from the other wheat fields, with the exception of the Red River country, were equally oppressive. It is very doubtful if any farmer, in the strictly wheat growing country, cleared 20 cents per bushel on his wheat last year; many did not net 5 cents per bushel. Suppose they netted 20 cents, and the yield averaged twenty bushels per acre. Then the account will be as follows: 160 acres, at 20 bushels per acre, 3,200 bushels—3,200 x20 equals $640. Out of this sum, and it would be the result of a very exceptional management, the farmer has to pay taxes to the amount of about $50, leaving him $590 to support his family, to educate his children, to feed, clothe, warm, and doctor them, and to feed his teams. There is but little of it left by the time the next crop is ready to save. If the average crop were fifteen bushels per acre—I will here say that no State in our Union has ever yet made that average, as the fields that are winter killed or not harvested for other reasons are never returned to the collector of statistics—then the cost of production was 50 cents per bushel, and the farmer who sold wheat at from 45 to 60 cents per bushel lost 5 cents or made 10 cents; and on that profit, if it were a profit, he could not live and keep free of mortgages.

During the present year disaster befell the wheat crop of Great Britain and France, and the rest of Europe made short crops, even Russia having but little to sell. Under the unprecedented demands made on us for our surplus breadstuffs, wheat has advanced to $1.38 for No. 2 winter in the export port of New York. This price affords the farmer a big profit, and has tended to add to the excitement now prevailing in the Mississippi Valley about the raising of wheat. Without any investigation as to the cause of the increase in value of the grain, the majority of the farmers have blindly concluded that these prices are to rule next year. Therefore they have sown broadly this fall, and will sow broadly next spring of spring wheat.

For the four years last past England has made poor wheat crops. The great wheat seller of Europe has been engaged in a costly war with Turkey, and since the close of the war her farming population have been restless, dissatisfied, and discussed. France buying wheat, as she is this year, is a spectacle not often seen. Suppose that all Europe make average crops next year, and that all European nations, excepting England, have wheat to sell—then what will American wheat be worth? This condition of affairs can confidently be looked for. We can not go on praying, or at least hoping, for disaster to overtake the agriculture of Europe, with any reasonable chance that our prayers will be answered or our hopes fulfilled. If they make a crop, and we are again blessed with redundant harvests, what will wheat be worth in our markets? The farmers must understand that under no circumstances will transportation tariffs be reduced, nor will the price of the so-called money-saving harvesting machinery be lowered. The commissions of the middle-men will remain at the present figures. Elevator and inspection charges will remain firm. No matter how low the price of wheat, these charges have got to be paid; and again I ask, what will remain for the American producer?

Since harvesting the last wheat crop, the price of land in some counties in Illinois has advanced from $3 to $5 per acre. The yield of wheat per acre in Illinois and Indiana was very large, and many farmers there have actually seeded their best corn lands to wheat. It must be that the old farmers of Illinois have lost the control of their lands, and a new generation of men is working them—men who do not know the inevitable result of raising wheat. The old men have been through the mill, and, experience, dearly bought, had taught them that the prosperity of Illinois lay in corn, cattle, and hogs, and they had practically abandoned wheat raising. The new generation must needs try their hands at this most expensive of all farming operations. Bitterly will they repent their fling.

There has been a great deal of bosh written about our labor-saving harvesting machinery, and most people think they are money-saving machines also. This is a mistake. With the single exception of the header (and this tool cannot be used in a dry climate) none of them save money. They save labor, but not money. They enable one man to do the work of three or four men, but he does it at the price of four or five men's work. Instead of the money being paid to the farm laborers of the agricultural regions, it is sent out of the farming districts into the manufacturing districts to pay for machinery and binding wire. An improved self-binding harvester costs $300; an old-fashioned cradle costs $4; and with equal ease the cradle will outlast the binder. Where men are plenty the grain can be cut cheaper with a cradle than it can be with a self-binder. It is not the American wheat growers to congratulate themselves on the cleanness of our method of saving wheat. The English and French methods are cheaper than ours.

The reasons we can undersell the English farmers in their own markets are:

1. The high rents they have to pay for the use of land.

2. The land has to be dosed with manure containing the elements the wheat plant requires. This is a large item of expense.

3. They have a damp climate, and have to work with their bound grain, unshocking, shocking, and turning the bundles to keep the kernels from sprouting before it is fit to stack or house. The total of their expenses is more than the transportation charges on our wheat fields to their doors. We are able to undersell and distress them.

It is to be hoped that next year Europe will make a full crop of wheat, and so put an end to our vast overproduction, before the present frenzy to sow broader broader areas to wheat results, as it surely will if unchecked, in seriously crippling our Western agriculture.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external disease.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have not space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

The examination of teachers for this township will take place at the school house, in Dist. No. 3, the 27th, at 9:30 A. M. Fred Morley, Superintendent.

I. S. Osborn is in Indiana purchasing walnut lumber for Grand Rapids market.

Mrs. W. H. Osborn is visiting friends at Milwaukee.

Fred Miller has leased the Darling farm for five years, at $400 per year.—The rebuilding of the dwelling house is postponed for the present.

"Rant" Miller has moved onto his farm in Dundee.

W. B. Mellon has leased the farm of A. Easlick.

A terrible gloom pervades this entire community from the prevalence and ravages of the diphtheria. On Monday the 1st inst., the sad intelligence passed from ear to ear that Alicia Remington was dead. The Tuesday before Miss Remington repaired to her home from the select school room, in the new hall, complaining of what was supposed to be quinsy. She was visited during the week by numerous comrades and friends, and at the close of the week's school, Friday evening, the scholars reported to their homes that "Licia" was very sick.—Nothing further was heard until the reassembling of the school Monday morning, when it was announced that Alicia died at 5 o'clock that morning of diphtheria, and that Sabie Rogers, Henry Karcher, Theodore Karcher and Willie Emmans were down with the same. School was closed, the scholars repairing to their homes weeping. Miss Remington's funeral was observed Tuesday and quite numerously attended, when two other cases were announced, "Lennie" Remington, brother of deceased, and "Monta" Rogers, a class mate and brother of Sabie Rogers. Lennie Remington died Friday morning and was buried in the afternoon with brief ceremonies and small attendance, the physicians insisting on sanitary precautions. Three other cases were announced, D. R. Wiggins, Nellie Russel, and little Eddie Russel.

Monta Rogers died Sunday morning and was buried in the afternoon. This is a very sad affliction, Monta being the main support of the family, Mrs. Rogers having lost her husband some years since.

Three other cases are reported, Miss Ida Martin, George Sisson, and Mrs. J. Emmans, besides numerous cases of sore throat and indisposition of afflicted families. It is thought that with the present sanitary precautions the plague may be checked. Still great anxiety prevails from numerous other young people being like exposed with those afflicted. A. E.

Sabie Rogers died Tuesday evening, the 9th, and was buried at 10 A. M., Wednesday. Four other cases are reported,—Percy Rogers, the only remaining child of the family, Will and Ransom Remington and Libbie Emmans.

RAISIN.

On Monday evening, March 1st, the surviving members of the East Raisin Base Ball Club met at the Kelly school house to re-organize for the coming season. There was a good attendance and each one of the boys felt like trying his hand at base ball once more.—The meeting was called to order by the President, and after the reading of the minutes, the election of officers took place which resulted as follows:

President—R. M. Boyd.
Vice President—Geo. Holloway.
Secretary—I. E. Arner.
Treasurer—C. M. Simonds.
Manager—R. M. Boyd.
Captain—A. R. Boyd.

After appointing a few necessary committees a motion was made that the nine be provided with uniforms and play with some nine at the town meeting, which being carried the meeting adjourned for one week.

Every one, young or old, who are interested in the game of base ball, is invited to attend the meeting on next Monday evening. The condition of reference, &c., to Edson Brothers, Solicitors of Patents, Washington, D.C., who furnish the same without charge Edson Brothers is a well-known and successful firm of large experience, having been established in 1866.

The winter term of the Seminary closes next week. Spring term begins March 30th.

Frank Rogers and Cyrus Crandall have returned to renew their duties as students at the Agricultural college.—Each has taught, so far as we can learn, a very successful winter term of school.

Mr. A. J. Pettis and his son, with their families, started for Kansas last Tuesday, where they intend to settle. They will be very much missed from the community.

The pop-corn and taffy social at B. I. Laing's last Friday evening was a very pleasant affair. The next will be a sugar social at Mrs. Warner Comstock's on Friday evening of this week. All are invited.

Rev. Alfred Bartlett is to move on the Bowen place this spring, where Anna and Willie can come to school from home.

The new minister of the M. E. society commenced his duties last Sabbath.

Married, on the 4th, by the Rev. J. Kilpatrick, Mr. Charles Fabrique and Miss Mabel Carpenter, all of Clinton.

The wind of Thursday night, last week, blew over Frank Silvers' barn, a small building where he kept his stallion, and the horse went out grazing in a wheat field.

And waste its fragrance on the desert air."
Full many a scamp with cheek and brow serene,

Our charter election went off on Monday rather quietly. We had two tickets in the field; republican or democratic had nothing to do in the case, as other issues were pending. The first nomination was styled the Corporation ticket, another was called the People's ticket. The first was elected and is a follows:

President—E. W. Freese.
Trustees, for two years—W. S. Kimball A. B. Vandemark, S. B. Rose.
Clerk—B. O. Randall.
Treasurer—D. H. Silvers.
Assessor—James Holiday, jr.
St. Commissioner—H. P. Pugh.
Constable—Robert Redick.

Mr. Michael Dewan was arrested last Thursday and taken to Adrian to answer the charge of selling liquor to an habitual drunkard. He plead "not guilty" and gave bail for his appearance at court next Thursday. We understand this is to be followed up by other prosecutions. If conviction follows we certainly have no reason to look any "village official" for it.

The "Pope" of the Clinton Exchange who abdicated his "see" some eight weeks since so unceremoniously one Sunday afternoon, succeeded in keeping his whereabouts a profound mystery to many until a few days ago when it became known that he was at Hillsdale working at the carpenter's trade. Having changed his occupation it would seem that it was also necessary to change his name, for he now goes by the somewhat historic name of "Putnam".

Our corporation election last Monday created about the usual amount of excitement in such cases, where there are two tickets in the field. Each worked faithfully to win, but the regular "Corporation Ticket" walked off with the prize, having gained an easy victory by electing all their candidates by majorities ranging from 26 to 61.

The next in order, we believe, is the third annual party at the Town Hall, for the benefit of Prof. N. J. Kellogg, by the members of his class, to take place Wednesday, March 17.

One would think by the way the new goods are attacked up at Silvers' that spring with its busy hum of trade had arrived for certain. March winds dont deter him from being promptly on hand with the current fashions.

O. E. Carpenter has sold his blacksmith shop and lot, but whether he intends to leave town or not we have not been able to learn. Hope he will decide to occupy some other building and continue in business here.

SPRINGVILLE

The doom which awaits this planet, as represented by the Clinton News, has taken cold.

Jackson Ayres is up to the times with a bouncing boy—9 pounds.

The dance at the Hall last Friday night was a very enjoyable affair, about twenty-five couple being present.

Notice is given by J. B. Stephenson Supt. of Schools, that the general examination of teachers for the coming summer will be held at Dist. No. 4, on Saturday, Mar. 27, to commence at 9 o'clock, sharp.

The Railroad excitement has been rather dull for a while until the last few days. Word has been received from Mr. Latcha that this is the last week and that the full amount has got to be raised or no road. Our committee are at work and will soon have their quotas filled we hope.

We should think that our merchant C. E. Jessup, would enlarge his store so as to have room to show his goods. Having had an opportunity to visit the back-room of his store a few days ago and there we found that he had most everything that you may call for.

Only one case of diphtheria, and that very slight, has made its appearance in our village, that of Georgie Arner. All district schools as far as we can hear have been closed, and every precaution is being taken to prevent the spread of the disease.

HORRIBLE ACCIDENT.

John O. Young, a switchman on the railroad yards at Adrian, met with a serious accident last Friday evening, by which he lost his life. The Times gives the following particulars of the accident:

Young, and Barney Clark, the night switchman, were in what is known as the lower yard of the depot grounds, near the freight-house. The switch-engine had been working up near the station house, and had just backed on to the freight-house track. The switchman Clark signalled the train to back. Young, thinking when the engine stopped, that it was about to go forward, ran and made an effort to jump on the rear pilot. But instead of going forward, the engine was backing, and Young was knocked down under the wheels. The poor fellow shouted to Clark, and at this moment the engineer, Jack Wynn, felt something under the wheels and stopped the engine. Young had managed to crawl between the rails, and lay there a horrible pulsating mass of shattered bones and torn arteries. He was carried to his home in the rear of Storey's barber shop, near the depot, where with his mother, step-father and his wife, he resides. Drs. Kimball, Morden and Rynd were at once summoned, and found the thigh bones broken, the femoral artery severed, and the heel of the right foot smashed in. The artery was at once tied up to prevent bleeding to death, but there was no hope of life. He lingered until sunday afternoon, when death relieved him from further suffering.

The deceased was only married last November, and his wife is a sister of John O'Neil, of this village.

The Diphtheria is raging quite extensively in Macon, and our village Health Committee have issued a circular to warn our citizens against the approach of this dread disease. Up to this date there has been no case reported in Tecumseh, and it is hoped that by observing the hints contained in the Health Circular, we may escape entirely.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

SOMEBODY'S MOTHER.

The woman was old and ragged and gray,
And bent with the chill of a winter day;
The streets were white with a recent snow,
And the woman's feet with age were slow.
At the crowded crossing she waited long,
Jostled aside by the careless throng
Of human beings who passed her by,
Unheeding the glance of her anxious eye.

Down the street, with laughter and shout,
Filled to the brim with life's joyous wine,
Come happy boys, like a flock of sheep,
Hailing the snow piled white and deep.
Pass the woman, so old and gray,
Hastened the children on their way.
None offered a helping hand to her,
So weak and timid, afraid to stir,
Lest the carriage wheels or the horses' feet
Should trample her down in the slippery street.

At last comes out of the merry troupe
The gayest boy of all the group.
He paused beside her and whispered low,
"I'll help you across if you wish to go."
Her aged hand on his strong young arm
She placed, and so, without hurt or harm,
He guided the trembling feet along,
Proud that his own were firm and strong.
Then back again to his friends he went,
His young heart happy and well content.

"She's somebody's mother, boys, you know,
For all she's aged, poor and slow;
And some one some time may lend a hand
To help my mother—you understand?
If ever she's poor and old and gray,
And her own dear boy is far away."

"Somebody's mother" bowed low her head
In her home that night, and the prayer she said
Was: "God be kind to that noble boy,
Who is somebody's son and pride and joy."
Faint was the voice and worn and weak,
But heaven lists when its chosen speak.
Angels caught the faltering word,
And "somebody's mother's" prayer was heard.

AFTER FIFTEEN YEARS.

An American Soldier's Story.

"Yes, they had a hard time of it there," says a short, sallow, keen-eyed man, glancing over the Illustrated Newspaper, which contains an engraving of Mr. Augustus Van Cleef's fine monument to the "unknown dead" at Salisbury, North Carolina. "I guess I ought to know something of what the southern prisons were like, during the war, for I had five months of it in Andersonville myself."

In a Pennsylvania train, among men of whom a few have taken part in the great struggle themselves and who have each and all had at least one relative engaged in it, such an announcement is quite sufficient to command general attention.

"No! did you, though?"

"S'pose you tell us the story, Mister; there's time enough 'fore New York, I reckon."

"All right, if you care to hear it. You see, when I first came over from England the war was just about beginning; and as there didn't seem to be anything for me to do I thought I'd better soldier than starve; so I went and 'listed right away. I wasn't long in finding out that soldiering and starving might sometimes mean pretty much the same thing, for rations were mighty scarce with us once or twice, when we got down on the Mississippi. I tell ye, after lying all night in a rice-swamp, stiff and wet and miserable, with nothing to eat and only marsh-water to drink, it was just like the breath of life to me to hear the alarm sounded and to know that we'd be at the enemy in a few minutes more."

At this moment a pale-faced man, who was going from seat to seat with a basket of newspapers and magazines, paused for a moment to listen, with a look of such evident appreciation that it hardly required the testimony of his empty sleeve to show that he too had been a soldier in his time.

"We had plenty of fighting down there," pursued the narrator, as the newspaper-man passed on; "but most of it was just the sort I didn't like—skirmishing among thick woods, where all you could see of your enemy was the smoke of his piece as he let fly at you, and where lots of other fellows were shot down without ever knowing who hurt 'em. I'd a pretty narrow escape myself that way one night. I was standing sentry at the out-posts when a Reb let slap at me from the thicket, and just caught me across the cheek here; you see the mark. I got behind a tree quick as winking, and there I stuffed my jacket with grass, and put it up against a tree with a stick through it and my cap on the top, to look as if I was peering round for a shot; and then I dropped down and crawled away into the bushes. Presently I heard the crack of the Reb's piece again, and looking out I just caught sight of his arm and shoulder, and brought him down with one shot.

"Well, not long after that I and some more got picked up by the southern cavalry, and it wasn't a great while before we all found ourselves hard and fast in Andersonville; and there we did have a time, sure enough.

"The place has been described so often that I dare say you have a pretty good idea of what it was like. It was a great, wide, swampy field with a stockade round it, inside which thousands of us were cooped up just like cattle in a pen. If a man happened to have a blanket and two or three bits of stick, so as he could rig up a shelter against the sun and rain, all the better for him; if he hadn't, he just took his chance; and I can tell you there were mighty few blankets among us, and many of us had little enough clothes either.

"All day long the sun kept roasting us alive, and at night the damp and chill ate into our very bones, and set us shivering till our teeth rattled again. As to food, many's the time I've gone all day upon a couple of biscuit, and small ones at that; and as to water, all we had was from a stream that ran through a cypress-swamp, and you may think what kind of stuff that was.

"You must have been powerful hungry, I reckon," remarked a sympathetic listener.

"Hungry? Well, I'll just tell you something about that. One day a young fellow, the son of the general that had us in charge, came into the pen to look around, with his little poodle-dog following him. He'd hardly turned his back when the dog was chopped up and eaten bodily; and when his master came to look for him there was nothing left but a bit of skin about so big. They stopped our food for a whole day because we wouldn't say who did it; but we told no tales—not we!

"Now I should tell you that to make sure of our not 'scaping they'd run a wire all around inside, about eighteen feet from the stockade; and that eighteen feet was called the 'dead-line,' because if a prisoner only put his head over that wire he got a bullet in him next minute from one of the sentries.

"Well, one night late in the fall I'd got as close as I could to the dead-line, so as the stockade might shelter me a bit from the cold wind. (Ugh! how it did bite through me that night!) I was just wondering if I could live through till morning, and hardly caring whether I did or not, when a sentry just outside gave a 'P'st!' that made me look up.

"'Say, Yank,' he whispered, 'I guess you'll want a blanket to-night. Catch hold of this.' And he rolled up his own and chucked it to me. 'I can git along without it.'

"'God bless you!' says I—and that was all. I chucked it back to him first thing next morning, so as he shouldn't get found out; but I guess it saved my life, all the same."

"Not long after that a lot of us were exchanged, and I among the rest. I can tell you I hardly felt the ground under my feet when I went out of that filthy hole a free man—though just at first I was as weak as a baby and could hardly stand without being held."

"And did you never hear no more o' that feller as giv' yer the blanket?" asked one of the audience, with undisguised interest.

"Never, worse luck! and I don't suppose I ever shall now, for it's good fifteen years since it all happened, and I've never been south since."

At that moment a sharp voice said close to his ear:

"Say, Yank, I guess you'll want a blanket to-night!"

The soldier started as if he had been shot, and turning hastily found himself confronted by the thin face of the one-armed newspaper-man, lit up with a knowing smile.

"Why, if here ain't the very man himself!" shouted the narrator, seizing him with both hands. "Well, who'd ever have thought it? You're just going along to New York with me, old chap, and you don't ever go back to peddling papers while I'm about."

And the ex-prisoner was as good as his word.—David Ker, in Good Company.

A SURE TEST OF INSANITY.

"Why do you think the plaintiff insane?" a witness examined to somebody's mental condition was asked by counsel at the trial.

"Because," replied the witness, "he is continually going about asserting that he is the prophet Mahomet."

"And pray, sir," retorted the learned judge, "do you think that when a person declares that he is the prophet Mahomet, that is a clear proof of his insanity?"

"I do."

"Why?"

"Because," answered the witness, with easy complacency, "I happen to be the prophet Mahomet myself!"

THIRTY OFF.

He was a young fellow in the hardware line. One day, when the boss was at dinner, a countryman came in to buy some nuts. He found an article that suited him, and wanted a dozen. Young Bug looked at the price list and found they were listed "25 cents a dozen, 30 off." He gave a low inverted whistle, and then, with a sudden [illegible] the customer 5 cents and told him he could buy the nuts at the other store. "By George," he said, when he was telling the governor of the transaction, "I thought the best thing I could do was to save the nuts anyhow."

Never let a cold run. Take it in time. All that is necessary is to procure a bottle of "Sellers' Cough Syrup," and be cured.

THE DISADVANTAGES OF CITY BOYS.

Some months ago, Rev. Washington Gladden, of Springfield, Mass., believing that if he could find out how the active and prominent men of his own city spent their boyhood, it would help to solve the problem of what is the best training for boys, prepared the following circular, which was sent to the one hundred men who could fairly be said to stand at the head of the financial, commercial, professional, and educational interests of the city:

"MY DEAR SIR:—I desire to find out, for the benefit of the boys, how the leading men of this city spent their boyhood. Will you be kind enough to tell me.

"1. Whether your home during the first fifteen years of your life was on a farm, in a village, or in a city, and?

"2. Whether you were accustomed, during any part of that period, to engage in any kind of work when you were not in school?

"I should be glad, of course, to have you go into particulars as fully as you are disposed to do; but I do not wish to tax your patience, and I shall be greatly obliged for a simple answer to these two questions."

No less than eighty-eight of the busy gentlemen who received this circular were kind enough to answer the questions,—some of them briefly, most of them quite fully, and it turned out that few had been brought up like most of the boys who crowd the ball-grounds and fill the streets of our cities in these later days. Here is a brief summary of the returns:

Of these eighty-eight men, twelve spent the first fifteen years of their life in the city, twelve in villages, and sixty-four were farmers' boys.

But of the twenty-four who lived in villages and cities, six were practically farmers' boys, for they lived in small villages or on the outskirts of cities, and had the same kind of work to do that farmers' boys have. One of the village boys said:

"I learned to hoe dig and mow; in fact, I was obliged to work, whether I liked it or no. In winter I went to school, and worked nights and mornings for my board."

Another said: "I used to work away from home some on a farm in the summer and fall. In the winter, when going to school, we three boys used to work up the wood for winter use."

Four others told substantially the same story. As these were about the same as farmers' boys, we may add them to that list, so that seventy out of eighty-eight,—almost four-fifths of all these men,—had the training of farm life.

Now how was it with the eighteen city and village boys on the list? Did they have an easy time of it? Five of them did, as they testify; five of them had no work in particular to do, but one of the five says that he studied law when out of school, and that was not exactly play. The rest of the eighteen were poor boys,—not paupers, by any means, but children of the humbler classes, many of them in narrow and needy circumstances, — and though they lived in cities or villages, they were accustomed from their earliest years to hard work.

"Was generally employed," says one, "during the summer months, and in vacations, in doing any kind of work that offered."

Four of the city boys were newsboys. One of them says: "The last year I was connected with the press, I earned one hundred dollars before breakfast."

"Another: "I have paid my own way since 8 years of age, without any assistance except my board from my eighth to my eleventh year."

Of all these eighty-eight boys, five only had nothing particular to do.

While these boys were growing and working, a great many others,—sons of merchants and lawyers, were growing up in Springfield, going to school and amusing themselves, as boys of their class are apt to do. Where are they? Only five of this class are heard from among the eighty-eight solid men of that city. Some of them perhaps are prosperous men in other cities, but the number cannot be large, for in Springfield only five men out of eighty-eight came from this class.—Ninety-four and a half per cent. were either farmers' boys or poor and hard-working town-boys.

Mr. Gladden made his report to the public of Springfield, in the form of a lecture. The mere announcement of the subject alone crowded the church, which is a large one, and the interest in the lecture was so great that the Mayor and several of the representative citizens requested a repetition in the Music Hall. When this came off, the hall was crowded and hundreds went away from the doors unable to gain entrance.

Mr. Gladden has rewritten the lecture, and his interesting facts and logical deductions will appear in one of the leading magazines for March. He is now engaged on a 'Talk with Girls' for the same magazine. It will be printed before long, and will be of vital interest to girls, and suited to their requirements, as this paper is suited to the boys.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

WORTH KNOWING.

A sort of trade-secret among upholsterers, it is said, is this recipe for ridding furniture of moths: A set of furniture that seemed to be alive with the larvæ, and from which hundreds of these pests had been picked and brushed, was set into a room by itself. Three gallons of benzine was purchased, at 50 cents a gallon, retail. Using a small watering pot, with a fine rose-sprinkler, the whole upholstery was saturated through and through with the benzine. Result: Every moth, larvæ, and egg was killed. The benzine dried out in a few hours, and its entire odor disappeared in three or four days. Not the slightest harm happened to the varnish, or wood, or fabric, or hair-stuffing. That was months ago, and not a sign of a moth has since appeared. The carpets were also sprinkled all round the sides of the room, with equally good effect. For furs, flannels,—indeed, all woolen articles cantaining moths,—benzine is most valuable. Put them in a box, sprinkle them with benzine, close the box tightly, and in a day or two the pests will be exterminated, and the benzine will all evaporate on opening. In using benzine great care should be taken that no fire is near by, as the stuff, in fluid or vapor form, is very inflammable.

HORSE RADISH.

Every garden should have a clump of horse radish. Besides being our very best relish to eat with fresh meats, it is extremely healthful, medical men tell us.

It is very easily grown. Every little piece of root can be made to form a new plant. The greatest trouble with it, is, it spreads so fast if dug among to any great extent, that it soon becomes as much of a bother as a weed, and is much harder to get rid of. The fragments of roots left in the earth, when large roots are dug for use, become independent plants, and are scattered by the plough. The best plan is to grow it in some corner where it is not necessary to disturb it only as it is dug for use.

To grow it most satisfactorily, the soil should not be too rich. If only moderately so, the roots will be smoother and firmer than when grown in a very rich soil. They will not be as large, but size is not of much account with this vegetable, unless you are raising it for the market.

The young and tender leaves in spring make excellent greens. Used with young beets they are very good as they supply a piquancy of flavor that the beet is wholly lacking in. Any one who is fond of mustard greens will like horse radish leaves used in this way.

Every fall we grate considerable quantities of it for winter use. Put up in keen, pure vinegar, in well corked bottles, it preserves its flavor excellently, and should be found on every table where mustard is. It is best, however, in early spring, and is an excellent appetizer in that season when the palate craves something sharp and exciting.

THE WAY TO HEALTH.

The only true way to health is that which common sense dictates to man. Live within the bounds of reason.—Eat moderately, drink temperately, sleep regularly, avoid excess in any thing, and preserve a conscience "void of offense." Some men eat themselves to death, some drink themselves to death, some wear out their lives by indolence, and some by over-exertion, while not a few sink into the grave under the effects of vicious practices. All the medicines in creation are not worth a farthing to a man who is constantly and habitually violating the laws of his own nature. All the medical science in the world cannot save him from a premature grave. With a suicidal course of conduct he is planting the seeds of decay in his own constitution, and accelerating the destruction of his own life.

NICE WAY TO STUFF AND ROAST DUCKS.—Boil potatoes, and mash them fine. Cut up three onions fine, mix with the potatoes, season with salt, pepper, and a very little thyme. Fill your ducks full with this dressing, rub them over with butter, and sprinkle with a little flour, put some water and baste often. Roast the giblets in the same pan when done, chop them up fine, and put them in the gravy.

When may two people be said to be half-witted? When they have an understanding between them.

Rupture

DR. J. A. SHERMAN—IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY DR. SHERMAN known to the public for the past 35 years or more through his successful method of treating Rupture without the annoyance and injury trusses inflict. His system of cure is by local external application.

No man is safe who has a rupture, no matter how insignificant he may consider it, for every man who has died from it once flattered himself that it was but a trifling ailment; and every man who now suffers from it and the injury of trusses, to such an extent that life has no enjoyments, once regarded it as unworthy special attention. It is not a stand-still affliction; it is progressive, even unto death. References given to gentlemen in the city, who have been cured During treatment no hindrance from labor. Patients from abroad can receive treatment and leave for home same day.

HIS BOOK ON RUPTURE

gives the most reliable proofs from distinguished professional gentlemen, clergymen and merchants his successful practice and popularity therefrom throughout this country and the West Indies.

The afflicted should read it and inform themselves of the certainty of being cured.

It is illustrated with photographic likenesses of extremely bad cases before and after cure, and mailed to those who send 10 cents. Save this, and remember in writing or calling the address is

CAUTION—The reputation of Dr. J. A. SHERMAN, attained from 40 years successful practice has started around the country Pretenders who assume to be the original Dr. Sherman famous for the cure of Rupture. Two of these parties an old and young man recently turned up in Boston; they duped several by their Fraudulent Advertisements; when detected, suit was brought, but the fellows ran away leaving sorrowful victims room rent, board bills and newspapers unpaid. Since then they have been discovered at 241 Broadway, New York, where they recently, by base deceptions defrauded an aged Clergyman.

BENSONS CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER

A WORD TO THOSE WHO USE POROUS PLASTERS. It is a universally acknowledged fact that

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters are Superior to all Others.

The great demand for them has caused a number of unscrupulous parties to make and sell worthless imitations under similar sounding names. As the market is flooded with inferior plasters selling at any price it is important for the consumer to know which is the best. It is well known that some of the cheap plasters have been examined and found to contain injurious ingredients which make them dangerous to use, causing paralysis and other diseases. CAUTION—See that the word CAPCINE on each plaster is correctly spelled.

THE RAILROAD STATUS.

Watchman, what of the night? Tell us what its signs of promise are. There is nothing particularly new since our last report. The city of Marshall has her quota raised, Addison has hers also, and most of the intermediate towns have theirs. Cambridge has her quota in hand, and the only section on the route now behind are the towns of Tecumseh, Franklin and Ridgeway. We have secured a few days extension of time, and can yet fasten the [illegible] of these towns [illegible] them. It is passing strang[illegible] aid should not have bee[illegible] long ago. There is scarce[illegible] in these three townships who will not admit that the Toledo & Milwaukee railroad would be an immense business benefit to this entire section. The amount of local aid asked for is extremely modest. It could be raised in ten days without taking a cent from any man more than he is amply able to pay. The canvassing committees here are making rather slow progress this week. The lukewarmness of a few village residents and the backwardness of the farmers are two discouraging obstacles, which they are striving their utmost to overcome. A dozen words of the proper import spoken by four of our wealthiest men would start the boom here again with the force of a nor'wester. And then a reasonable amount of aid from a few well-to-do village residents and the farmers about us would fill Tecumseh's quota within one week. The farmers of Franklin and Ridgeway also must come up to the mark with more liberality and promptness. Even should Tecumseh raise her quota it will not insure the road, unless the towns on each side of her do their full duty.

The business advantages of this enterprise have now all been fully presented, the residents of the village understand what an impetus it would give to business here, the farmers are aware of the positive benefits which would accrue to them, in fact every school boy knows the great business advantages to any community of a strong competing line of railroad. Forty years ago when the Michigan Southern was built west from Monroe, Tecumseh by a little liberality could have secured the location of that line. A generous donation by a few real estate owners would have brought the line here beyond a doubt. We failed to grasp the opportunity. Tecumseh was then compelled to pay heavily to get a plug road from the Junction, and to-day Tecumseh is about one-third the size she would have been had we fastened the direct road from Monroe. A similar opportunity now presents itself. Shall we repeat our blunder and suffer the consequences for the next generation?

THE TAX ON KNOWLEDGE.

The efforts of the newspaper press to secure a reduction of the duties on print paper and the raw materials used in its manufacture are likely to prove successful. The movement recently made by the type founders' ring to increase the tariff on printing type has given a fresh impetus to the crusade against monopoly, and it seems more than likely now that the newspapers of the country will obtain relief in both these directions. Among the telegrams from Washington in yesterdays' papers is a statement that this question will be considered on Friday by the committee on ways and means, and the indications are that a report will be made favorable to a reduction. Should the present exorbitant price of print paper continue for a few months, many small country newspapers will be taxed out of existence, and many large establishments will be seriously crippled in their business. Then let the good work go on. Every newspaper in the land should let its voice be heard in this important crisis, and that voice should give forth no uncertain sound. Not only printing type, but also print paper, wood pulp and chemicals used in paper manufacture, should be placed upon the free list.

IN case the Toledo & Milwaukee road should be built here, the Heck Brothers are going to enlarge their mill and double its capacity for business.

Louisville Courier Journal.—There has been no dancing in the White House since the days of Mrs. Lincoln, except on one night when Mrs. Hayes, in replacing the carpet, had left a tack on the floor which the President stepped on in going to bed.

A Boom for the Democracy.

New York Tribune.—The sudden eruption of Democratic oratory in favor of harmony, coupled with appeals of union against a third term, shows what a boom the renomination of General Grant would be to the Democracy. Even Tammany would forget then that it had even loathed Tilden.

A Failure.

Detroit Evening News.—Logan finished his week-long speech against Fitz John Porter, and Matt Carpenter took up the thread of the argument where Logan dropped it. The controversy, it must be confessed, has not thus far at least lashed the people into that frenzy of loyal enthusiasm which was expected.

White House Generosity.

Atlanta Constitution.—Mrs. Hayes gave a basket of flowers to an Indian maiden in Washington the other day. The customary tract was probably in the bottom. We trust that the dusky girl will carefully preserve these gifts and carry them to her forest home.—There is nothing more fattening to a camp of starving Indians than a basket of flowers and a carefully prepared disquisition on the results of visiting beer gardens on Sunday.

Would Be a Nice Row.

Cincinnatti Enquirer.—The Washington Post has filed notice on Mr. Tilden that, if he asks the Democratic Convention for the nomination for President, he must give assurance that he can carry New York. In this the Post takes up the demand of Democrats generally. Now, if Grant is nominated for President by the Republicans, the Republican party will say to Mr. Conkling that he must carry the State of New York. Then there wo'd be a nice row.

The Only Practical Issue.

Philadelphia Times.—If the Republicans shall make a strong ticket on the 3d of June, all the wisdom the Democrats can crowd into Cincinnati will hardly be equal to the task of getting the Democracy into line for a hopeful contest; but if Chicago shall blunder, the only practical issue at Cincinnati will be whether Democratic blunders shall give the Republicans success, or Democratic wisdom win a victory in the interest of sectional peace and national prosperity. The party that shall be justly responsible for the renewel of sectional strife in 1880, and thus disturb business and sow the seeds of distrust afresh thro'out the country, will be the defeated party in November next.

Two Terms Are Enough.

Philadelphia Times.—Since Senator Conkling has explained that a third term after all isn't a third term, it would be interesting to see Senator Cameron explain the meaning of the resolution adopted by the Republican Convention in this State in 1875, which declared an "unqualified adherence to the unwritten law of the republic which wisely and under the sanction of the most venerable examples limits the Presidential service of any citizen to two terms." This doesn't seem to leave any room to explain that another term of Grant is not objectionable because it is not consecutive; it seems, in fact, to say without any qualification that two terms are enough for any man.

What Does He Want It For?

New York Herald.—The country is at peace, the people are prosperous, sectional bitterness is disappearing, the constitutional limitations are observed the laws are obeyed and where necessary are enforced, and here comes the ex-President, in answer to a silly cry for a "strong man at the head of the government," [illegible] the ex President and demands a third term of the Presidency. He knows all that is going on—how the Harrisburg convention and the Utica convention were manipulated by him, what scandals already surround the attempt to nominate him, what opposition his demand meets with in his party—and yet he persists. Certainly he owes it his party and to the country to explain what he wants it for.

To whom it may concern:

I am personally acquainted with Miss Helen Hartwell, who has been for some years a resident of this city. She is an intelligent young lady of ability as an elocutionist and reader, and I respectfully commend her to any who may desire to hear good reading or may seek to engage her services in the capacity of a teacher of elocution. Charles M. Croswell.

We cordially concur in the above, having known Miss Hartwell from childhood. Norman Geddes.

A Reform Demanded.

EDITOR HERALD.—If we had a Maine law in Michigan it would be a grand thing for the female sex and the dumb creatures generally. On Friday the 27th of February, the effects of John Barley corn were witnessed. A team of horses were travelling along the road coming from Tecumseh to Ridgeway, drawing a wagon with a man and woman in it. The man (if he can be called a man) was shamefully abusing the poor dumb creatures, and when he could not satisfy his demon spirit on the poor horses he turned and abused his poor wife. I made enquiry as to who the person was and it turned out to be a man living east of Ridgeway. I suppose his wife had brought him out of one of those low drinking dens which are a curse to any town. Nearly every town has an establishment like the above and I suppose Tecumseh is not one whit behind the rest. Is there no way of stopping parties from acting like fiends when they are under the effects of intoxicating liquors. If there is not it is about time that the people of Michigan were rising in a mass and demanding a law that will put a stop to such exhibitions as these. Hoping that you will allow space in your valuable paper for this letter, I remain,

JOSEPH TAYLOR.

A Tramp Imposter.

A man came to Mr. C. C. Clark's in Raisin a few days ago and hired out to work for him. After staying a few days, he took a sudden departure, and several articles belonging to Mr. Clark mysteriously disappeared about the same time, among which were a pocket book containing $10, a black dress coat, a pair of fine boots, a pair of mittens, a pair of stockings and a halter strap. The man is a German about twenty-five years of age, thick set, cross-eyed, light hair, about five feet tall, is very fond of music and carries an accordeon with him. Let the newspapers pass him around.

The Tecumseh Poultry Yards.

Kinnicutt & Keyser proprietors of the Tecumseh Poultry Yards have just issued their descriptive circular giving a statement of their Plymouth Rocks. This variety of fowl is preeminently an American breed having originated in New England and been perfected by poultry fanciers until they have become an established breed. Their fowls have been reared and mated with the utmost care, some of them having taken prizes at Chicago, Fort Wayne and Indianapolis.

They have three yards for the present season. Eggs from either yard $2,00 per 13. In addition to their Plymouth Rock fowls they are breeding some pure Magie or China Pigs, which they will keep for sale. Mr. Keyser informs us that they have bought an incubator and intend to raise chickens this summer by the artificial process.

THE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

We understand that a citizen of Toledo was in Adrian a few days ago, making loud and serious threats that arrangements were being perfected to prosecute the officers of the County Agricultural Society for damages arising from the grand stand disaster last fall. He stated that the evidence was all prepared, and that legal proceedings would soon be instituted. Perhaps it would be well for the persons who are stirring up this litigation to "make haste slowly." People have had time now since that awful calamity to take a breathing spell and the 'sober second thought' is beginning to make itself felt. Public sentiment will not sustain any vindictive measures against the officers of the agricultural society, nor against any one else. It is extremely doubtful whether there is any legal case against the society, and even if there should be a legal cause of action, it is still more doubtful whether a jury would award more than nominal damages in a suit against it. We fail to see how any good can be accomplished by using such a public calamity as an excuse for carrying on a vindictive litigation. If those who are anxious to spend their money in this direction would contribute the amount to the aid of the sufferers, it would be much better for all parties concerned.

THE GEORGE BANGS CASE.

The case of Geo. Bangs against the Lake Shore Railway Company, which was tried in the Circuit Court last week, resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $4,000. The case has attracted no little attention in this section, and the plaintiff has the universal sympathy of the community here, and their congratulations over his success. He certainly deserved a much larger judgment, but even this sum is better than nothing. The case was hotly contested inch by inch, and every legal point which could possibly be urged on the part of the defendant was brought forward. The attorneys for defendant gave notice that they should appeal the case to the Supreme Court, but it is doubtful about the case being seriously contested further.

The charge of the judge was quite lengthy. The subject mostly considered was that of contributory negligence. The plaintiff had a right, the judge said, to expect that the train, even after stopping at Chicago street, would make the usual stop at the station. But, however much the company through their officials might have been to blame, any want of prudence and carefulness on the part of the plaintiff, which a person of ordinary caution would have used, will lay the responsibility for injuries received where they happen to fall. With the train in motion at a speed of at the least eight miles an hour, it was not the duty of the plaintiff to jump from the car. When he saw he was being carried by the station, he should have informed the conductor or brakeman that he (the plaintiff) wished to alight at the station, and it would have been the duty of the officials in charge of the train to have secured for the passenger a safe and speedy exit from the train at the station. The judge said he had refused to allow testimony to be taken in regard to the custom of people of Tecumseh getting on and off the train while it was passing through the village, because this fact was immaterial to the issue. Those who did this took the responsibility of any danger which might result, on themselves. It was not material that there was a rule of the company forbidding trains to run through the village at a rate of more than six miles an hour. If injury resulted from getting on or off a moving train, then the responsibility must rest where it happens to fall. The question for the jury to consider was whether the plaintiff Bangs did use that caution and carefulness, which, under all the circumstances would be used by a person of ordinary prudence and carefulness.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine.

The number for April is one of unusual attractiveness; its pages are brilliant with literary and artistic gems. Among the most notable articles are a charming German allegory, "The Maiden of the Winged Wheel"; a comprehensive article on the Mormons, by the Rev. W. Fleming Stevenson, entitled "A City of Saints." It is profusely illustrated, as is likewise "Martin Luther," a biographical study, by A. H. Gurernsey. There is a timely and appropriate article by Mrs. E. W. S., entitled "Fashion and Faith." The subject of No. III, of "The Children of the Bible," is "Joseph the Dreamer." The Department of fiction contains, besides the continuation of the popular serials "Be-Be, the Nailmaker's Daughter" and "Little Hinges," some exceedingly interesting stories by celebrated writers.

The illustrations number about 100. A single number is only 25 cents, and the annual subscription $3, postpaid. Address Frank Leslie's Publishing House, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

WE understand that some parties in Toledo are contemplating the building of a pork packing establishment in Tecumseh in case the new railroad goes through here. This is only one of the many advantages which would accrue to Tecumseh in case the Toledo & Milwaukee R. R. should come here.

THE NEXT CENSUS.

The following circular has been issued by John C. Sharp of Jackson, the Supervisor of the census for the first district of Michigan.

"Your attention is respectfully called to the following extracts taken from the letter of instruction received by me from the Superintendent of Census, Gen. Francis A. Walker, which must govern me in the selection of enumerators:

"The appointments should be made with reference to physical activity, and to aptness, neatness, and accuracy in writing and in the use of figures. These requirments are scarcely more in the interest of the census than in the interest of the enumerator himself. Unless the officer appointed be fairly proficient in all several respects, he will find his duties very trying and his pay very meagre. To appoint old or broken men to this duty (as Supervisors will, on all sides, be pressed to do) would not be an act of charity but of cruelty.

"The census requires active, energetic men, of good address and readiness with the pen. Only such can do the work with satisfaction to the Government or profit to themselves. In general, young men are to be prefered for the service.

"It would not merely be a wrong to the Government, but it would be a positive cruelty to the appointee himself, for a Supervisor to confer a commission as enumerator upon any person not of decided clerical aptitude and of active habits, writing freely, and good at figures."

To the end of carrying out these instructions this office will require all applications for appointment to the office of enumerator to be in the hand writing of the applicant, and to give his name in full, age, occupation, residence, (and, if in city, ward and street,) postoffice address, and such facts tending to show the neccessary qualifications and experience for the position sought, as he may choose to give.

The enumeration districts for this Supervisor's District, except the city of Detroit, have been reported to the Census Department for approval, and when approved, notice thereof will be given through the medium of the press of your county. Applicants must be residents of the enumeration district for which application is made.

The selection of enumerators for the several districts will be made at as early a day as possible consistent with making the necessary investigations, but it is not believed that the announcement of the selections can be made before the 1st of May.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

LOTS OF BUSINESS ON HAND.

Adoption of the New Rules—The Washington Monument.

WASHINGTON, March 6, 1880.

Notwithstanding this Congress has already before it more bills than it can ever by any possibility dispose of "the cry is still they come." There are now pending in the House about 4,800 bills and in the Senate nearly 1,500, yet on Monday last another grist of them was tumbled into the Congressional hopper. All kinds of measures were proposed, one being a bill by Mr. Morrison, of Illinois, making it lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold from immediate publication statistics relating to the importation or shipment of grain, provisions or other merchandise imported into or shipped from the United States. This is intended to defeat the recent order of Secretary Sherman instructing Customs officers to withhold from publication all information concerning cargoes arising or departing when shippers so desire. This order is in the interests of speculators, whether intentionally so or not, and Congress will probably circumvent it.

The new rules of the House are at last completed and adopted. During the closing discussion Mr. Weaver improved an opportunity to call attention to the manner in which he had been treated by the Speaker, in studiously neglecting to recognize him on Mondays to offer his financial bill. Mr. Harris proposed a new rule, to the effect that motions to suspend the rules on Mondays to pass resolutions of a merely sentimental character should not be entertained, and, in support of his proposition, referred to the frequency with which the time of the House was wasted by the presentation of resolutions embracing individual and partisan opinions, many of which were nothing but clap-trap. Mr. Weaver replied to Mr. Harris, and after referring to his unsuccessful efforts for five consecutive Mondays to obtain recognition from the Speaker, charged that some Congressmen were deceiving the people by clap-trap. They professed one set of principles when on the stump, soliciting votes, and steadily ran away from those principles when called upon in the House to give them practical effect. He warned the Democrats that they must take a different position on the financial question from the Republicans, or they would be supplanted by Greenbackers in the next Congress. This brought a good deal of applause from all sides of the house. But the show for Mr. Weaver's financial measure is still very poor nevertheless.

Congress is called upon once more to meet the Washington Monument question. For a quarter of a century the public ear has been filled with criticisms and sneers over the unworthy design of the Monument. But a deeper national disgrace has been the record of Congress. It is now eighty-one years since Congress passed a resolution ordering "a marble monument to be erected by the United States at the city of Washington" to commemorate "the events of General Washington's military and political life." Embodied in this resolution passed in 1799 was a formal request that the family of General Washington permit his body to be deposited beneath the monument. This request was sent to the widow of Washington by President Adams. The following notable sentence is from a favorable reply returned by Mrs. Washington: "Taught by the great example which I have so long had before me never to oppose my private wishes to the public will, I bend not, I cannot, say what a sacrifice of individual feeling I make to a sense of public duty." In view of the above solemn resolve of Congress it is well-nigh incredible that during the seventy-seven years from 1799 to 1876, not a dollar was appropriated to carry it out. In 1876 Congress persuaded the Washington Monument Association to turn over its unfinished shaft, promising to complete it. For this purpose $200,000 were appropriated. A Government Commission was organized to take charge of the work, and up to this time one-half of the amount has been expended in strengthening the foundation. The other $100,000 will be used during the coming Spring to purchase materials and machinery, and now the engineers in charge ask for $300,000 more to continue the work until October, 1881. In addition to that sum it is estimated that $877,000 will be required to complete the monument. The society expended $230,000 in raising the shaft to its present height of 174 feet before Congress took it up. If no change be made in the plan the shaft when completed will be 500 feet in height and will be crowned with a pyramidal iron roof 25 feet high.

Among the bills introduced in the house Monday, was one by Mr. Clark, of Missouri, appropriating $12,000 for an equestrian statue of General George A. Custer, the officers and men of the Seventh United States Cavalry who were killed in the battle of Little Big Horn.

THE FARMERS' PAGE.

NORTHERN LENAWEE FARMERS' CLUB.

(This Club will hold its meetings regularly on the first and third Thursdays of each month, at the Reform Club Hall in Tecumseh, at 2 o'clock P. M. until further notice. All are heartily welcomed and cordially invited to attend. Communications thankfully received. Correspondence solicited from other clubs, especially where co-operative action can accomplish desirable results. All letters should be addressed to E. L. RUSSELL, Sec., Tecumseh, Mich.)

THURSDAY, March 4, 1880.

The Club to-day was very slimly attended; nearly all the members, for some unaccountable reason, being absent, and those who did attend were late in getting together, so there was but little time for work, consequently all preliminary business and questions and answers were omitted, and the principal question called for and made the subject for discussion. This was Fruits and the Setting of Orchards, in response to the following communication:

E. L. RUSSELL, Secretary N. L. F. C.—SIR: I wish to plant an orchard of apples, peaches, pears, cherries, and plums, and would like a sufficient number of trees of each kind to secure a good amount and a choice variety of fruit of each, from early to late, for the supply of a family. Perhaps the Club would assist me in making out a list of what trees I want, the number and varieties of each kind.

This communication was received some months ago, and a committee appointed to prepare such a list, and present at this meeting, to be followed by discussions upon the same.

This committee failed to report, and but for the timely and valuable assistance of Mr. B. W. Steere, Mr. Edmonson and Mr. Billmire, who were present as visitors, by invitation, the Club would have been nearly a failure. These gentlemen are especially interested in fruit growing, and the club is indebted to them for a list of fruit trees, and an interesting dissertation upon the same.

Mr. B. W. Steere, thinking that it would be inconvenient for him to accept the invitation and be present, had prepared the following communication to send to the Club, which was read, and he happily being present to comment upon it:

ADRIAN, March 2, 1880.

E. L. RUSSELL, Sec. N. L. F. C.:

Thanks for invitation to attend your Club meeting of March 4. Had expected to do so, but now find that probably I cannot. Don't know that I fully understand the question, but suppose the best varieties for a family orchard will claim part of your time. For 50 trees would recommend the following list, which might be varied somewhat had I more time to spend upon it:

WINTER FRUIT.—4 Baldwin, 4 N. Spy, 3 Red Canada, 4 R. I. Greening, 3 Y. Bellflower, 2 Golden Russet, 2 Talman Sweet, 2 Willow Turg, 1 Morris Red, 1 Bailey Sweet, 1 Wagoner, 1 Seek-no-farther, 1 Swaar, 1 Peck's Pleasant, 1 Vandevere N. Y., 1 Roxy Russet, 1 Rambo, 1 Hub'n Non-such, 1 Cogswell.

FALL FRUIT.—1 Chenango Strawberry, 1 Late Strawberry, 1 Dyer, 1 Wolcott, 1 Ramsdell Sweet, 2 Fall Pippins, 1 Twenty oz., 1 Snow.

SUMMER FRUIT.—1 Harvest, 1 Red Astrachan, 1 Early Joe, 1 Primate, 1 Sweet Bough.

In an orchard of 100 trees would add Stark, Belmont, Maiden's Blush, and increase the number of the good marketable trees already mentioned. I would gladly increase the number of trees of such fine old sorts as Swaar and Spitzenburg, did they succeed as well as formerly; as it is, poorer but surer kinds must take their place.

One thing it might be well for us all to remember, and that is to plant liberally of good kinds that are known to succeed in our own neighborhood, and but sparingly of new or unknown varieties.

As to pruning bearing apple trees.—I have already been at work among the hardy kinds during the mild weather of the last ten days. I believe in the early spring pruning, usually doing the most of it in March, and stopping short when the buds begin to swell much; not to be resumed till the leaves are fully expanded in June.

Lighter work will then be in order unless you desire to check the growth of some rampant young specimen that runs up so rapidly it can't stop to form fruit buds. And right here I will mention what most of you probably know already, that while spring pruning usually increases growth, summer pruning, especially if severe, checks it. Will give a few more of the essentials before closing, and 1st. Moderate annual pruning is best. 2d. Never cut off a branch till you can tell just why you do it. 3d. Better prune too little than too much, too little being easily remedied in future. 4th. A sharp, fine toothed saw, in the hand of a man of gumption, is a good tool. 5th. Cut close to the ring or bulge at the base of the limb and let the face of the cut surface be parallel with the trunk or main branch from which you are pruning. 6th. Leave the branches pretty evenly distributed, but encourage the heaviest growth towards the southwest, and somewhat lighter and thinner on the north-east or shady side.—7th. Prune horizontal branches, especially the lowest tier, mostly on the under side. 8th. Where one horizontal or nearly horizontal limb is too close above another, remove the one that will leave the tree in the best shape.—The same rule will apply where branches cross and are maring each other. 9th. Varieties inclining to too many small twigs and spurs should have them carefully and evenly thinned. 10th. If you have time brush over the large cuts with light colored paint or melted grafting wax, especially late spring work. Finally, the "pruning fever" is somewhat contagious, and if we catch the malignant sort we shall be liable to cut and slash indiscriminately, without being able to give the ghost of a good reason for what we are doing. B. W. STEERE.

Mr. Edmondson presented a list of apple trees similar to that of Mr. Steere's adding Jersey Sweets, Maiden Blush, Munson Sweet, St. Lawrence and Ben Davis, and leaving out a few varieties included in Mr. Steere's list.

Mr. Bellmire gave a list of Peaches he had chosen for his own orchard of 1000 trees: Craffords early, Craffords late, Barn's early, Old Mixom Free, Semi Cling, Early Rareripe, Alexander, Amsen June, Hales' Early, Smart's Free and Foster.

A vote of thanks was extended to these gentlemen for their timely and interesting remarks. There was some further discussion upon farming, setting trees, re-setting old orchards, and different varieties of apples. Subject for the next meeting, Practical Farming. On motion the meeting adjourned for two weeks.

MORE FRUITS AND GARDEN TRUCK.

Many people seem not to know that the range of soil and climate, where choice fruits will grow and succeed at their best, is very limited, especially with peaches; that fruit flourishes well, in a very small portion of the world, that is occupied by civilized communities; pears do not thrive in every section where it is eaten; many small fruits do not succeed fully in all localities, and good plums least of all; apples, perhaps, thrive most universally of all the cultivated fruits. Those finer and more tender fruits do not admit of long distances of transportation. Many delicious and wholesome garden vegetables do not last for a long season of market and use; and so are not raised in as great quantities as would otherwise be the case.

But now, that we have such perfected systems of canning and saving green vegetables and "garden sauce," and such improved apparatus for drying rare fruits and condensing them in such small space; and particularly of doing all the above so rapidly that there is no longer any danger of growing too much of those luxuries, that they should spoil or be wasted; because, all that cannot readily be sold whole or in natural form, can be dried at very profitable rates, and find markets for all; foreign demands for our preserved and dried fruits and vegetables is very great and increasing, as is also true for our wheat and other grains; so that those farmers and gardeners who have specially favorable lands and locations for raising all those commodities, may safely make preparations for largely doing it.

This leads me to remark, which is one object of writing this little article, that the people in and around Tecumseh, who own such superior, warm, genial lands, would do well to strive and largely increase their yield, per acre, of wheat, by employing the best skill and methods within their reach, in order that they may have more land to devote to the raising of fruits and truck, which can be made more profitable than grain growing; particularly would they do well to prepare for raising large amounts of peaches, pear and plums—the three p's—they will all be wanted. The improved methods and facilities (above mentioned) of drying and marketing all that can be grown, removes nearly all the danger of too much being raised, or of much waste and loss by decay, before they could be utilized; all will be wanted ere long.

The remembrance of my first visit from the famous "Genessee flats" country, in New York, to Lenawee county, which was in the summer of 1837, when it charmed me much by its variety of soil, foliage and aspect, in one direction was the light, sandy soil; in another, the heavier gravel loam; and still another, the more tenacious clay loam; with handsome burr-oak groves, like large orchards, in different localities, gave the place the paradisal appearance of a handsomely settled town; and my impressions then, as now, were that it was one of the most favorable regions for fruits and farming to be anywhere met with; so that more wheat to the acre, and fewer acres of it, and more to fruits and gardening, would be wise policy there.

And this leads me, further, to remark, in view of your earnest efforts and fair prospects for increased railroad facilities, for exporting these delicious products, which your locality and soil are so richly adapted to, it has been my privilege to visit, more or less in traveling for different objects, most portions of all the western and northwestern States, and most of the southern States too; and my careful observations everywhere enables me to safely say that no northern locality, and few southern ones, are more favorable for successfully growing fruits and garden truck than the splendid, handsome lands of Lenawee county.

Then, be quick in building your railroads, to invite "numerous numbers" more of people—railroad workers and others—to settle and eat your productions right there where raised. That's economy. "A word to the wise," etc. D. S. C.

Celebrated throughout the World for their remarkable Cures.

Dr. Howe's Arabian Milk-Cure,

Dr. Howe's Arabian Liver Pills.

THE ONLY MEDICINE that has EVER BEEN KNOWN to "POSITIVELY" CURE CONSUMPTION.

TESTIMONY

Of the Hon. Jos. E. Gray, Judge of the Superior Court, Chicago, Ill.

CHICAGO, Dec. 14, 1876.

DR. S. D. HOWE,
DEAR SIR:—Permit me to add my grateful testimony to the army of witnesses to the virtue of your justly celebrated Arabian remedies. For a long time my wife was seriously afflicted with hacking cough, oppressed breathing, soreness of the chest, and constant acute pain in the lower portion of the right lung and under the shoulder blade. Her sufferings were intense, and she became extremely nervous and prostrated. Her disease was pronounced consumption by the physicians of Chicago and other cities, whose prescriptions had been taken without benefit. When you visited Chicago in June, 1875, we called on you, having very little hope of deriving help from your treatment. We were inspired with hope by the skillful manner in which your thorough examination was conducted, and the satisfactory explanation with which you closed your diagnosis. My wife determined to take your medicines in accordance with your plan and practical directions. She began to use the Arabian Milk Cure and Arabian Tonic; their beneficial effect at once became manifest—the cough loosened and soon ceased, respiration became easy, the soreness of the chest was relieved and all pain removed, she began to gain in flesh and improve in strength and appearance. I fully believe that your medicines and skillful advice have saved the life of my wife. She unites with me in this grateful tribute to the merit of your remedies.
Very respectfully yours,
JOSEPH E. GRAY.

DR. A. FRASER'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external disease.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have not space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

Either a "feast or famine" always with some. Tally another lawyer in Clinton, this time in the person of Mr. S. Wilber, of Ann Arbor, who has rented a dwelling and office here and will be along sometime this week, according to reliable information furnished your correspondent yesterday.

Our enterprising merchants, E. W. Freese & Son, have instituted a new departure in the business conduct of their store. They have sold their stock of drugs to Randall & Kimball, and crockery, earthen, wooden ware, &c., to W. W. Demuth, and propose in the future to give their attention more fully to staple and fancy dry goods. Mr. Freese has long enjoyed the confidence, and deservedly, of this community as an honest, upright business man, and citizen, and his eminently successful business career in the past warrants the belief that the change recently made will have like satisfactory results in the future.

The Congregational parsonage is finished and ready for occupancy.

Zeigler & Schmitt's new work shop, in the west part of town is completed and their machinery, &c., has arrived, and they will soon begin the manufacture of Zeigler's new patent.

Mr. Charles Fisk returned to Detroit yesterday to complete the study of law in the office of F. G. Russell.—He has been home a few weeks for rest and recreation, and goes back with the expectation of finishing his studies about the first of May. Hon. Charles will decide to engage in the practice of his profession here where he is so well and favorably known, and where his fine talents and gentlemanly manners have won for him hosts of friends.

The Congregational Church will give a maple sugar festival at W. W. Demuth's on Friday evening of this week.

Prof. Kellogg's complimentary dance comes off this week Wednesday evening.

George Belden's boy got his fingers into the cogs of a feed cutter the other day, and three of them were very badly crushed.

Abner Finch, of Yates Co., N. Y., has been visiting friends here for a few weeks.

Miss Ida Hulton delivered an excellent temperance lecture at the town hall last Sunday to a full house.

M. P. Brown, of Tecumseh, has opened a photograph gallery in Clinton, in the building west of St. John's grocery store.

SOUTH MACON.

15, 14, 13. Too easy—give us something harder; the small boy does it here. Good to keep children out of mischief, but expensive to business men. To all those who cannot find out, and must know how right away, we will send solution on application, and take all bets to the contrary.

In view of the fact that the Lake Ridge School House, the former place of holding elections in this township, cannot be procured for the coming spring election, the township board at a public meeting in conference with others, have procured the lecture room in Grange Hall for that purpose, at which time the electors will take such action as they deem best for future elections.

The diphtheria is still raging, but it is thought in a milder form. Percy Rogers, the only remaining child of Mrs. E. Rogers, died Saturday morning and was buried in the afternoon. Mrs. Rogers' affliction is incomparable, having lost three bright and promising children inside of six days, leaving her desolate and alone.

Two other cases of diphtheria announced—Lida Emmons and a child of Dr. Howell's; all others convalescing.

The township board of health in connection with the health officer, Dr. G. Howell, and other physicians, met at the office of the township clerk, on Monday, the 15th inst., in conference on precautionary measures against the spread of diphtheria. After prolonged discussion it was ordered that the health officer take such course as he deems best to check the further spread of said disease. "Pretty thin order in view of the surroundings." A.E.

SPRINGVILLE.

EDITOR HERALD:—You are requested in Franklin and Tecumseh to clear the track and make way for the Toledo and Grand Haven railroad. Yesterday we held a railroad meeting and did nobly; we now have $14,500 on hand, and stand ready to make it good when called upon to $15,000. It has been a heavy burden on a few who have come down to the bottom dollar. Had those who will receive the benefits of the road came forward and put in it would have been raised long ago. It is busy on the road at this time, our farmers have made up their minds to sell their wheat and there is at least two or three car loads leaving the town daily to market at Tecumseh, Adrian and Brooklyn.

The Lake Mills stand quiet on flouring, not wishing to take the chances on the condition of the roads to the railroad station in the future. Hoping we may secure the railroad on our line to Tecumseh and Toledo is the sincere wish of yours, T. H. MOSHER.

T. H. Mosher has subscribed $1000 for the railroad.

The Springville school, taught by Horace Wilson, closed last Thursday.

How the ladies are flocking to Mosher's store to try the new goods.

The farmers in this section have been marketing large quantities of grain the last few pleasant days.

Some of our townsmen refuse to give their notes to the railroad company, and they are giving them to individuals, and they become responsible to the company.

The concert given by the Springville singing class at Ayers' Hall, the 11th, was with the best of the season. At an early hour the house was well filled; the pieces being very appropriate and well rendered, together with the tableaux made it interesting.—The proceeds of the concert are to apply on the next year's school. The class have something over $105 raised for the next year. The best of satisfaction has been given by the present instructor, Mr. Wright, and the class have secured his services for the next year.

RIDGEWAY.

Geo. Scol'ck is making a flying visit to St. Johns and vicinity.

And now our six weeks' sleighing for March has set in.

Our city grist mill has shut down for repairs

G. W. Jackson and Wm. Snedicor have been to Toledo and laid in a supply of Milburn wagons.

Burt Palmer and wife, of Reading, are making their friends here a visit.

Wall Linn received the full force of a kick from a horse, square in the face, Tuesday night, and besides losing some teeth was badly bruised. What made him "muff" it?

The board of health was in session on Monday afternoon, and after due deliberation concluded that the present state of the diphtheria cases did not necessitate any action on their part. We are glad to state that altho' there are a number of cases in Macon at present they seem to be under control.

The "13—15—14"—game is no longer a puzzle to Ridgewaylte. We can all do it, and yet none of us have sworn to the fact. We don't swear over such simple games down here.—In fact, we don't swear; we are even tempered, nothing ruffles us except to play "now you see it and now you don't" all winter with railroad projects. We shall listen for a swear from Adrian soon on this little game.

Crying for Reform.

The following communication received from Ridgeway shows that there is crying need for reform in that city. The letter is somewhat of a literary curiosity. We suppose the author's intention must have been to give somebody fits in blank verse.

Morenci Observer:—All of our older citizens are, doubtless, well acquainted with John Gould, one of the honored pioneers of this vicinity, and will learn with regret that his mind has been so far impaired that he has sunk into harmless semi-idiocy and is entirely unable to attend to his affairs. Advancing years and financial trouble are supposed to be the occasion of his unfortunate condition.

An Attractive Book.

Appropos of the Indian question so prominent and important at this time, we have received from the National News Bureau, at Washington, D. C., a volume, just issued, entitled "One Little Indian," by Roy Maitland. It is handsomely printed from clear type, on good paper, and embraces a story from real life, the scene of which is among one of our best-known and most civilized Indian tribes, in the far West. The heroine is an Indian girl, and the author one who has been much among them. The book is issued as one of the elegant satchel series by the Author's Publishing Company, and sold at 25 cents. Address orders to the National News Bureau, Lock Box 29, Washington, D. C.

The Detroit Free Press says: "The method of teaching reading by employing newspapers and magazines to some extent in place of books, has been adopted with good success in several places, and more particularly in the East. A teacher in one of the Detroit schools interested her scholars in a high degree by reading to them the history of Peter the Great, as given in the Febuary and March numbers of Scribner's Magazine." The superintendent of public schools in Portland, Me., has recently subscribed for a number of copies of St. Nicholas for use as a reader in the schools of Portland.

Appletons' Journal for April contains a paper giving an inside history of the Suez Canal, that is likely to create no little sensation at the present moment. The figures given of the cost of the canal are in themselves startling, but revelation of the means taken to secure the completion of the work, of the disaster it brought upon the Khedive, and the ruin upon the trade and finances of Egypt, affords a very extraordinary chapter of history, which at the present juncture should be well pondered. The contents of the number are of varied interest.

Godey's Lady's Book for April

Opens with a most charming scene from "The Ranger," a group of three graceful maidens, the laughing faces of two throwing into strong contrast the sad countenance of the third. It is one of Darley's happiest efforts. The fashions are tempting enough to coax all the dollars from the purses of the fair sex to array them for April's capricious sunshine; and mothers will find the boy's suit in the diagram a blessing in its simplicity and comfort. The new serial, "Glenarchan," begun in this number, opens with interest, and promises to rival its predecessors in merit. The heroine is a perfect specimen of the American girl of culture and refinement, while also possessing courage and determination, and all readers will watch with interest for the result of her "home mission." The other literary contributions are fully up to the high standard of excellence the publishers seem determined to maintain. Subscriptions taken at the HERALD office.

Peterson's Magazine for April is already on our table, ahead as usual. Every month, almost, this popular lady's book has some new and special attraction. The one this month is a series of designs in embroidery, furnished by the "Philadelphia School of Art-needlework." One is for a tea-table cloth, printed in colors; another for the ends of a towel, also printed in colors; another for a pillow-case, full-size; another, a beautiful Flower Alphabet for marking handkerchiefs; besides a score of many other designs in crochet and embroidery of all kinds

Specimens are sent, gratis, with full particulars, to those wishing to get up clubs. Back numbers from January inclusive can, if desired be supplied. Address, Chas J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The April number of The North American Review will contain an article by George Ticknor Curtis, entitled "McClellan's Last Service to the Republic." It will cover the whole period of Gen. McClellan's military career, from the flank movement to the James to the defeat of Lee at Antietam. It will be followed by a second part in the May issue, giving the full history of McClellan's removal from command. These articles will be replete with facts hitherto unknown to the public.

Adrian Press: Rev. I. C. Billman, formerly of this city, delivered a sermon in Dean's Opera House on Thursday evening last week on the antagonism of church and schools. The substance of the discourse was that the teachings of the churches and those of the sciences were opposed to each other, and one or the other must give way. The Unitarians were the only people whose belief placed the religious and intellectual faculties on the same basis.

The State Institute.

Those of our citizens who can conveniently accommodate teachers during the week of the Institute, Mar. 29-April 2, are requested to communicate with the undersigned. Please to state the number you can entertain whether with board or lodging or both, and prices.

LETTER FROM CUBA.

The Quaint Old City of Havana—Customs of the Cubans.

HAVANA, CUBA, Feb. 18, 1880

DEAR SISTER VELINA:

Here we are in picturesque Cuba, and in the quaint old city of Havana, a city claiming a population of 300,000 souls. Before attempting to describe anything here, I will begin back and give you a hurried account of our embarkation at New York and some of our experiences, pleasant and otherwise, on ship board during our passage hither.

On Thursday, Feb. 5th, we embarked on board the noble ship Saratoga, Melinda, Ella, the two boys and myself. At the ship we found a considerable number of friends who had assembled to bid us "God speed" and wish us a pleasant voyage and safe return.

The Saratoga is by the way the finest steamship plying between New York and Havana, and is a sister ship to the Niagara of the same line. At half past four the lines were cast off, and the Saratoga glided out from her berth and down the bay. In less than an hour we passed the fortifications at the entrance of the New York harbor and the quarantine buildings. In a half hour more we swept past Sandy Hook and were soon well out at sea. Night settled in upon us and we lost the sight of land to see it no more until off the coast of Florida. The sea during Thursday night and in fact during Friday and Saturday was as still as a mill pond, and our experiences were quite uneventful. The second morning when we arose we found ourselves in the gulf stream and surrounded by an atmosphere such as you have on a bright summer morning, calm, balmy, and without the slightest chill. Saturday night the wind began to rise and Sunday we did not all rise, yet there was a general uprising of the stomachs of all on board. The sea was exceedingly rough and tossed the ship about as though it were a play thing. Any one who attempted to walk either in the saloon or on deck, did so at his or her own peril. I saw one lady attempt to walk and she was thrown violently across the saloon and struck on the floor and side of the cabin. A gentleman started to her rescue and was thrown in the same way and fell precisely in the same spot. Another gentleman made an attempt to render assistance and he too was thrown into the pile. The three were obliged to remain on the floor until the ship righted herself, and then they crawled back to their seats on their hands and knees. I have often seen troubled waters but never saw any before so much disturbed as these on this Sunday morning. All day Sunday the sea continued boisterous and lashed the ship with its greatest fury. Instead of having divine service as you did last summer on the Arizona, the passengers who ventured out of their state rooms spent the Sunday in waltzing about the saloon and deck to the measure of the "wild waves." Sunday night the wind went down with the sun, and during the night and next day (Monday) we glided along the coast of Florida, across the Gulf of Mexico and into the snug little harbor of Havana. The harbor is formed by a little bay, which may be compared to a pocket with an exceedingly small opening for the hand. At the entrance of this pocket or bay is situated the old and time honored Fort Morrow Castle. Steaming past this old and seemingly neglected stone structure, we were quickly in the center of the pocket and in full view of this curious old city with its low stone buildings and tiled roofs. Our ship dropped anchor and we prepared to disembark by means of one of a score or more of little sail boats that clustered about our ship. The boatmen were screaming in Spanish at the top of their voices, very much as you have seen and heard hackmen in New York. After a few minutes sail in one of these boats, partly covered with canvass and resembling an emigrant wagon going west, we were safely landed on a dock built out of solid mahogany. At the time these docks were built mahogany was the cheapest wood there. We deposited our trunks and bundles in a huge cart (Havana's only express wagon) drawn by a small mule. We were seated in two cabs drawn by two other very small mules, and in the short space of ten minutes we were all at the Hotel Pasaje (Pasockie) situated on the Parado, which is the fashionable drive and promenade in Havana. Monday evening after dinner, at six, we strolled around the city, noting the strange sights and queer ways of this curious people. You are of course aware that the Spanish is the only language spoken on the island of Cuba. This has made it far more difficult for us to find our way and gain information, but we have done the best we could with signs and gesticulations, and as the Southerner would say, we have picked up a "power" of information concerning the country. Only here and there have we found a Cuban who could speak our own dear English. Tuesday, the next day after our arrival, was the last day of the annual carnival season, which occurs each year during the last three days before lent. This carnival is a time honored custom with the Spanish people wherever you find them, but in Cuba, or at least in Havana, we are told that it is not now so generally observed as in former years. It consists in the day time of processions of fantastically dressed and masked people in carriages and on horseback. All classes seem to join—the high, the low, the rich and the poor. The evenings are devoted to mask balls and festivities of like nature.

Gen. Grant drove in the procession by the hotel where we are stopping. He recognized us and a few others standing in front as Americans, and that evening called to get acquainted with the American ladies stopping at the hotel. Unfortunately the two ladies with me were out and all the other American ladies except one.

In the old part of Havana the streets are not over fifteen feet wide, and the sidewalks not over two feet, and in some streets even narrower. The buildings are mostly one story high, being built of a soft yellow stone, which very soon flakes off and looks old. There is no glass used in Cuba, the windows being guarded with iron bars and wooden shutters. The windows are so large that when the shutters are open the whole fronts of houses seem to be out. This is done to enable them to get as much air as possible in this hot climate. Those who are able to own or occupy a two or three story house usually use the lower story for stabling their horses and keeping their carriages, while the family occupies the upper stories which are always more desirable on account of the better circulation of air to be enjoyed in upper rooms. At the hotels the parlors and best rooms are always on the top floor for like reason.

The climate here is uniform and uniformly hot, the winter being only about ten degrees cooler than in July or August. The thermometer for the last few days has stood about 90° in mid day. The people rise early and transact their business, which is usually over by eleven o'clock; from eleven to four very little business is done, when it begins again and continues up to ten or eleven o'clock at night. The city at night is very gay, being brilliantly lighted, much the same as Paris. From eleven to four the people here shut up their houses to keep out the heat, very much the same as we do to keep out the cold.

The Cubans are very unclean in their habits and exceedingly cruel in their nature, and the most dishonest race I believe on the face of the earth. Every third man you meet is an officer of some description, and the common people have to be kept down by brute force. On the Island of Cuba alone there are stationed 100,000 soldiers, and in the city of Havana 3,000 police.

The vegetation grows in all its tropical luxuriance. Oranges, cocoa nuts, bananas and a score or more of tropical fruits everywhere abound.

Among the many cruel sights we have seen there is not one half so cruel as that which we witnessed in the treatment of slaves on a sugar plantation a few miles from this city. Slavery in Cuba, as it has and still does exist, is the worst type of slavery that has ever stained the face of this fair earth. A slave in our South was a free man compared to a slave in Cuba. Men, women and children work in the fields indiscriminately with bare heads, bare backs and bare feet, under the vigilant watch of a slave driver. They are fed twice a day only, each slave having two or three cold boiled yams and a small piece of dried horse meat, brought from South America. This food is cooked once a week in large cauldron kettles, set in arches just the same as a northern farmer cooks food for his hogs. The only difference is that the farmer cooks for his hogs every day while the planter cooks for his slaves once a week. At night the slaves are driven into what is called a slave pen, resembling a fort and the one entrance is guarded by blood hounds. I could think of no words in the English language strong enough to express my unutterable disgust as I beheld this degrading spectacle.

A word or two more about the fashions and customs and I must close, for at four o'clock to-day we leave, thank God, this uncivilized country.

The ladies here never wear bonnets or hats, but gracefully throw over their heads a piece of Spanish lace, which they wear at all times, on the street, at the theatre, in the ball room or wherever you chance to meet them. They shop entirely in carriages; driving up in front of a store a clerk brings out the goods and the selections and purchases are made without alighting. The great pests in Havana are the venders of lottery tickets and the beggars, who are everywhere present. Cuba is at least two hundred years behind the United States, both in improvements and general intelligence. As regards the science of agriculture, you would conclude that Columbus only left day before yesterday. We saw fifteen slaves ploughing with three crooked sticks, with a piece of iron like a cultivator tooth on the end of each stick. To each stick which they called a plow were yoked by the horns two yoke of oxen, with one slave to drive each ox and one to hold the one-handled plow, making five slaves for each or fifteen for the three. Each driver had a long rod with a sharp brad in the end with which he constantly goaded the ox under his care. Each driver having only one ox to punch, you can readily see how he could make it pretty lively for the ox. Yet with all the drivers and all the cruel punching, I had to take range by a tree to determine whether they were moving or not. I venture to say that there is not a farmer in Lenawee county but that can take a smart team of horses and a Yankee plow and do more and better work than these fifteen slaves.

In a word, the three great national characteristics of the Cubans are filth, cruelty and dishonesty.

The carriages are waiting to convey us to the steamer, so good by, picturesque Cuba; good by forever, and should it ever be my lot to see thee again, may you ere then be purged of your vices, your crimes, and your cruelty.

Will write you again from New York, giving you an account of our passage homeward. Yours in haste,

R. T. BUSH.

THE JOKERS' JOUST.

Sothern and Florence were both playing in St. Louis last Saturday evening—the former in Lord Dundreary at the Olympic; the later as the Hon. Bardwell Slote at Pope's. Lord Dundreary was lisping and stammering through one of his choicest stories; the audience was convulsed with laughter, when suddenly Billy Florence rushed wildly upon the stage in his Mighty Dollar rig, and grasping the astonished Sothern's hands, said, "Excuse me, old boy, but I am in a hurry," and in an instant darted out. Sothern was unable to collect himself; the audience, who knew Billy Florence was playing at Pope's nearly a dozen blocks away, wondered first, and burst into the most rapturous and enthusiastic applause afterward. Lord Dundreary and the other actors were so demoralized, and the house was in such an uproar that the play was forgotten. Cries of "Florence!" rang from all parts of the house; Dundreary regained sufficient consciousness to hurry after the flying member from Cohosh; Georgiana left the stage; everybody before and behind the stage was looking for the practical joker, but Florence had jumped into a hack at the stage entrance and vanished like a dream. The play was proceeded with without ringing down the curtain, after an intermission of about ten minutes. In the meantime Sothern had collected his wits. Florence had got back to his own theater in time to appear upon the stage at the proper time to make love to Mrs. Gen. Gilflory. The actor and actress were in the zenith of their courtship again when a tall, long-coated and black-whiskered Englishman, with a hop, skip and jump, arrived in front of Slote and Mrs. Gilflory just in time to interrupt the love-making. It was the eccentric, tongue-tied and brain-bereft Lord Dundreary, who had fled his own "bwotha" Sam and everybody else at the Olympic, and had come to pay his respects to the American couple at Pope's. Slote saw this, and the mercury in his spirits ran down to his boots, and began rolling out through the toe-taps to the footlights. His face blanched, his eyes shrunk, and his shape collapsed until his clothes flapped in the wind throughout the open stage door like a flag at half-mast over a gibblet. The audience greeted Dundreary with a hurricane of applause, and shouted and shrieked and whistled until it seemed as if the top story of Pandemonium had been torn off and every noise of the nether region had rushed out through the opening. Lord Dundreary advanced amid all of the uproar, and told the exquisitely funny story about the dog and the rabbit. The audience laughed at it with greater vehemence than usual, but Bardwell Slote did not laugh.

Don't deceive yourselves. "Dr. Sellers' Cough Syrup" for the cure of colds and coughs has no equal. Sold by druggists at 25c.

Why is the vowel "o" the only one sounded? Because all the others are inaudible.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

SURE CURE FOR DIPHTHERIA.

A correspondent writes: "Should any of your family be attacked with diphtheria do not be alarmed, as it is easily and speedily cured. When it was raging in England a few years ago I accompanied Dr. Field on his route to witness the so-called wonderful cures he performed while the patients of others were dropping off on all sides. The remedy, to be so rapid, must be simple. All he took with him must be powdered sulphur and a quill, and with these he cured every patient without exception. He put a teaspoonful of flour of brimstone into a wine-glass of water and stired it with his finger instead of a spoon, as the sulphur does not readily amalgamate with water. When the sulphur was well mixed he gave it as a gargle, and in ten minutes the patient was out of danger. Brimstone kills every species of fungus in man, beast and plant in a few minutes. Instead of spitting out the gargle he recommended the swallowing of it. In extreme cases where he had been called just in the nick of time, when the fungus was too nearly closing to admit of gargling, he blew the sulphur through a quill into the throat, and after the fungus had shrunk to allow it, then the gargling. He never lost a case from diphtheria.

"If a patient cannot gargle, take a live coal, put it on a shovel, and sprinkle a spoonful or two of flour of brimstone at a time upon it; let the sufferer inhale it, holding the head over it, and the fungus will die. If plentifully used the whole room may be filled almost to suffocation, and the patient can walk about in it inhaling the fumes, with doors and windows closed. The mode of fumigating a room with sulphur has often cured most violent attacks of cold in the head, chest, etc., at any time, and is recommended in cases of consumption and asthma."

HOW TO SWEEP A ROOM.

We take from the Chicago Alliance the following directions for sweeping a room, which are written, evidently, by one who knows whereof she speaks:

To sweep and dust a room properly is an art, and, like all fine arts, has a right method. Well done, it renovates the entire room, and the occupant takes possession feeling that "all things have become new." It is not merely a performance to be done by the hands, but a work into which taste and judgment, in other words, brains, must enter. Are these closets opening into the room to be swept? Arrange the shelves, drawers or clothing preparatory to sweeping-day; then let this be the first to be swept. Cover the bed with soiled sheets, as also all heavy articles that cannot be removed; first, however, having carefully dusted and brushed them. Remove all the furniture that can easily be set in hall or adjoining room, having first dusted it; then taking a step ladder, begin to sweep, or brush, or wipe the cornice and picture cords and pictures. Draw the shades to the top of the window, or, if there are inside blinds, dust them carefully. Open the windows. All the dust left in the room now is in the carpet or air, and the current of the windows will soon settle it.

Now begin to sweep, not toward a door or corner, but from the outer edges of the room toward the center, where the dust will be taken up with a small brush and dust-pan. Go over the room once more—this time with a dampened broom; that removes the last bit of dust, and gives the carpet a new, bright appearance. Replace the articles of furniture as soon as the air is entirely free from dust, uncover the rest, and the room is new and clean. All this seems an easy thing to do, but there is not one in a hundred will follow out the details. Some will sweep the dust into the hall or from one room to another, and then wonder why their house is so dusty again. Others forget cornice and pictures, and thus leave a seed of future annoyance; while a third class will do all but using the damp broom, which is as the finishing touches to a picture.

Careful people are often very much annoyed by inconsiderate people who lean their heads against the wall paper, leaving "outward and visible signs" of their having done so. These disfiguring marks can be removed by taking pipe-clay or fuller's earth, making with it a thick paste with cold water, and laying it gently on the stain. When dry, rub off, and unless an old stain the grease will have disappeared. If old, renew the application.

A successful dairyman is the one that makes uniform "gilt-edged" butter the season through. The best dairymen all found that there is no article so perfectly adapted to keeping up the golden June color, now absolutely necessary in order to realize the best price, as is Wells, Richardson & Co's Perfected Butter Color, made at Burlington, Vt. ANY LETTERS FOR THE WATTSES?

A lantern-jawed young man stopped at the postoffice last Saturday and yelled out:

"Anything for the Wattses?"

Burt, our polite postmaster, replied, "No there is not."

"Anything for Jane Watts?"

"Nothing."

"Anything for Ace Watts?"

No, there is positively nothing for any of the Wattses, either individually, collectively, severally, jointly, now and forever, one and inseparable."

The boy looked at the postmaster in astonishment, and said:

"Please look if there is anything for John Thomas Watts?"

Not only does it positively cure Consumption, but Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Hoarseness and all affections of the Throat, Chest and Lungs yield at once to its wonderful curative powers as if by magic. We do not ask you to buy a large bottle until you know what you are getting. We therefore earnestly request you to call on your druggists, M. Wright & Son, and get a trial bottle free of cost which will convince the most skeptical of its wonderful merits, and show you what a regular one dollar size bottle will do. For sale by M. Feels Young Again.

"My mother was afflicted a long time with Neuralgia and a dull, heavy, inactive condition of the whole system, headache, nervous prostration, and was almost helpless. No physicians or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters, with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over 70 years old.—We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family."—A lady, Providence, R. A Rochester Physician's Experience.

R. Calkins, M. D., of Rochester, N. Y., certifies Oct. 6th, 1879, that he has used the Safe Kidney and Liver Cure in his practice for diseases of the kidneys and liver, and the result has been satisfactory in the extreme. He says: "I would now prescribe the same remedy to all similarly afflicted, and you are at liberty to so state in your testimonials."

The strongest and purest Lye made. Will make 12 pounds of the best perfumed Hard Soap in 20 minutes without boiling.

The best water-softener made.

A best disinfectant.

The following are some of the advantages claimed by users Lewis' 98 Per Cent. Powdered Lye:

First. It is packed in an iron can with a slip or removable lid, easily taken off and leaving the contents exposed, thereby saving the trouble, annoyance, and danger (from flying particles) as with other Lyes, which, being sold in tin cans, must be broken with a hammer to get the Lye out.

Second. It being a fine powder, you can remove the lid and pour out all the contents, being always ready for use.

Third. A teaspoonful or more can be used, as in water-softening, scrubbing, etc., and the lid returned to the can, and thereby save the balance of contents. With other Lyes all must be dissolved at once and used in a short time, or the strength is gone.

Fourth. Absolute purity. Free from all adulterations.

Sixth. No failure is possible in making Soap with this Lye when the simple directions given are followed.

Ninth. This Lye is 25 per cent. stronger than any other Lye or Potash.

Tenth. One to two teaspoonfuls will soften a tub of the hardest water.

Eleventh. One teaspoonful will thoroughly cleanse Sinks, Drains, or Closets.

Rupture

DR. J. A. SHERMAN—IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY DR. SHERMAN known to the public for the past 35 years or more through his successful method of treating Rupture without the annoyance and injury trusses inflict. His system of cure is by local external application.

No man is safe who has a rupture, no matter how insignificant he may consider it, for every man who has died from it once flattered himself that it was but a trifling ailment; and every man who now suffers from it and the injury of trusses, to such an extent that life has no enjoyments, once regarded it as unworthy special attention. It is not a stand-still affliction; it is progressive, even unto death. References given to gentlemen in the city, who have been cured. During treatment no hindrance from labor. Patients from abroad can receive treatment and leave for home same day.

HIS BOOK ON RUPTURE

gives the most reliable proofs from distinguished professional gentlemen, clergymen and merchants his successful practice and popularity therefrom throughout this country and the West Indies.

The afflicted should read it and inform themselves of the certainty of being cured.

It is illustrated with photographic likenesses of extremely bad cases before and after cure, and mailed to those who send 10 cents. Save this, and remember in writing or calling the address is

CAUTION—The reputation of Dr. J. A. SHERMAN, attained from 40 years successful practice has started around the country Pretenders who assume to be the original Dr. Sherman famous for the cure of Rupture. Two of these parties an old and young man recently turned up in Boston; they duped several by their Fraudulent Advertisements; when detected, suit was brought, but the fellows ran away leaving sorrowful victims; room rent, board bills and newspapers unpaid. Since then they have been discovered at 241 Broadway, New York, where they recently, by base deceptions defrauded an aged Clergyman.

A WORD TO THOSE WHO USE POROUS PLASTERS. It is a universally acknowledged fact that

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters are Superior to all Others.

The great demand for them has caused a number of unscrupulous parties to make and sell worthless imitations under similar sounding names. As the market is flooded with inferior plasters selling at any price it is important for the consumer to know which is the best. It is well known that some of the cheap plasters have been examined and found to contain injurious ingredients which make them dangerous to use, causing paralysis and other diseases. CAUTION—See that the word CAPCINE on each plaster is correctly spelled.

TECUMSEH, MICH., MAR. 18, 1880.

THE NEW RAILROAD.

Some new developments have taken place in the Toledo and Milwaukee Railroad project during the past week, and the recent moves on the chess board have demonstrated two things.

First, that this road will certainly be constructed in the near future on some route through this section. The proof is accumulating every day on this point.

Secondly, the Tecumseh route must come up to the chalk line at once, and the towns of Ridgeway, Tecumseh, and Franklin must raise their quotas or they will lose the road. We have been dilly-dallying with fate ever since the first of March, and fate is a very fickle old maid, who is just as likely as not to decide against us when we least expect it.

The ball has been opened in Adrian and two meetings have been held there, at one of which Mr. Latcha himself was present. Last Friday evening, their first meeting was held at the office of the Michigan State Ins. Co. and we gather the following particulars from the report thereof, as it appeared in the Times.

At the office of the Michigan State Insurance company last evening was held a sort of informal meeting to consider the needs of the city, and devise measures of relief—to diagnose the disease, as it were, and prescribe for the patient.

Few of our prominent business men were absent from the meeting, and as will be seen by the report below, the situation was pretty freely and fully discussed. The disease can be expressed in two words.

It is dry rot.

The patient, however, is not beyond hope, and the doctors think the disease can be eradicated, and the body restored to a state of health again.

The meeting was called to order, John R. Clark called to the chair, and W. H. Cleveland appointed secretary.

The chairman remarked that he was unaquainted with the objects of the meeting, and would like some light on the subject.

W. H. Walby said he had recently had an interview with Messrs. Latcha and Gorham, who are interested in the building of the Toledo, Grand Haven & Milwaukee road. Mr. Latcha said he had not met with much encouragement from Adrian, and had projected another line through Tecumseh, running half a mile from Addison on the north side of Devil's lake, and running through Tipton and Tecumseh to Dundee. Cambridge and Addison were alive. Mr. Waldby thought this was a better line for Adrian, than the one prospected through Rome Center, and country now tributary to Adrian. Mr. Gorham told how Marshall had been cut off by railroads running to other points—Albion and Battle Creek. They had prospered to the detriment of Marshall, and now she was determined to have another railroad. Adrian was in great need of something to stimulate her industries, and Mr. Waldby thought it well to get together, look over the situation, and devise some measure of relief. With reasonable effort on our part, our population could be increased fifty per cent. in three years, and real estate would have double its present value. The speaker was willing to put in work and money to achieve the desired result. But we must pay for anything that was worth having; we could not get it for nothing. Mr. Latcha was willing to come here on Monday evening and confer with our citizens in relation to the matter of the road he represented.

W. S. Wilcox said he had received a letter recently from Hon. James F. Joy in relation to the Butler road, and had answered that Adrian wanted the road and expected to pay her full share; that what she did would depend something on what the policy of the road would be in regard to her. He suggested that Mr. Joy or somebody else in the interest of the proposed road, visit our city. He had heard nothing since, and presumed the people of Detroit were waiting to finish their work at home, before coming to see us. The paper mill could not be run here, for it cost $20 a day more than it ought to to run it. He tho't steps should be taken to revive our injured enterprises, or to start new ones. Our mechanics wanted work, but they could not stay here without it, and if they could not get it they would be compeled to leave the place.

Ira A. Metcalf remarked that he had heard a good deal said about the tendency of railroads to build up small towns. This was not his idea; he thought the more small towns there were in the county, the better trade there would be in Adrian.

Mr. Waldby said the proposed road was to be run in the interest of the Pensylvania road.

Mr. Wilcox moved that Mr. Waldby be instructed to notify Mr. Latcha that the people of this city would be pleased to meet him for conference on Monday evening next. The motion was carried.

W. H. Cleveland said that he had had some correspondence with Mr. Latcha, and was satisfied that we could secure the road for $40,000.

Col. Eldredge said the town was retrograding instead of advancing, and he had an interest in seeing the thing changed. But talk would not build railroads, and the heavy real estate men in the city should be argued with and the effect of a new road here should be explained to them. A quarter of what real estate would bring now donated to a new road would increase the value of the real estate more than double. He moved that a committee consisting of Gov. Croswell, W. S. Wilcox, Anson Backus, and W. H. Waldby be appointed to see what could be done, and report on Monday evening next.

Mr. A. L. Millard hoped something would be done to improve the condition of affairs in the city. He suggested an expression of the meeting relative to what could be done.

Gov. Croswell spoke of the early history of the city, and the business air and enterprise which characterized the early settlers, until it became the third city in the state. Then in some way arose a want of faith in railroad enterprise, and north and south roads were especially looked on with disfavor. The result was that other towns outstripped us in the race. What it was asserted here could not be done, had been performed on every hand. It was time for us to take hold of some of these enterprises, and say they should succeed. If we are left out in the cold it will be our own fault. The more railroads we had the better we should be off. The Govenor spoke of the bad accomodations furnished us by the L. S. & M. S. road. The time was bad, and we were only on a plug road. But if we secured the other roads we should be better used by the Lake Shore company. One strong objection urged against Adrian in the location of the school for the blind was that we had but one road.

Dr. Rynd said the policy of the Lake Shore road had been cruel and remorseless, and we could not maintain our status in the state without increased railroad facilities. We must have railroad competition. Adrian as the center of an agricultural district must furnish it the facilities required. The Gods help those who help themselves. $100,000 would be a good investment for this city if she could secure competition in frieght.

Getting railroads here would have this effect, and if we could be assure that we were going to get out from under the heel of this miserable railroad monopoly, he was willing to give all he could afford and a little more. What benefited one of us, benefited all of us. We were mutually obligated to each other, and we could not escape the obligation. If we invested $5 we should get $20, $50, or $100 back. This was the natural business center of Southern Michigan, and if we had the facilities we would control it.

Now, kind reader, stick a pin right here, and go back and read over this report carefully a second time. Consider that some of the wisest and most successful business men in this section of the state were present at this meeting and that they expressed their views freely without restraint. The business interests of Adrian are sadly in need of a revival. What, more than all other things, will produce the magic effect desired? Competing railroads. You have the answer in just two words. There was a big grist of wholesome truth ground out at that meeting, and the statements made were just as applicable to the situation of Tecumseh as to that of Adrian. If a competing railroad will be of such importance to Adrian, of how much greater benefit would it be to Tecumseh with our superior water power and other advantages? The Toledo & Milwaukee road is certainly ours, if we grasp it. And although our chances are not as good for the Butler road, still if we fasten the former at once we will be far more likely to secure the Butler road also hereafter. Such a grand business opportunity has not been within Tecumseh's reach since the admission of this State into the Union. Hence it seems utterly incomprehensible that our success in this project should be hazarded by the refusal of three or four of our heaviest citizens financially to give their fair proportion of the aid required. We cannot believe that they will persist in their refusal to help us.

On Monday evening last a second meeting was held at Adrian and Mr. J. A. Latcha was present. But as our Adrian friends seemed to be afraid to let the rest of the County know the details of the projected work, Mr. Latcha was turned over to a close communion committee of thirteen, and his conference with this committee was veiled in secrecy. The committee appointed consists of the following well known citizens of Adrian: W. H. Waldby, C. M. Croswell, W. S. Wilcox, S. E. Hart, W. H. Cleveland, W. T. Lawrence, Ira A. Metcalf, Chas. Rynd, N. Geddes, Wm. Colvin, Anson Backus, D. M. Baker, J. R. Clark. The make-up of this Committee shows conclusively that the Adrian people mean business in this matter.

We are glad however to be able to state that Tecumseh is at last waking up to the emergency. Much more than half of her quota is already in hand, and the balance can be secured in a few days with proper effort. Our committee held a meeting Tuesday evening and began work again yesterday with renewed energy, and what is more, they are meeting with very gratifying success. A strong pull and a pull altogether for the next ten days will carry us out of the woods. Measures will be taken at once to revive the work in Franklin and Ridgeway and the farmers of those towns as well as in Tecumseh and Raisin must decide to unloosen their purse strings when called upon. A vigorous campaign all along the line till the last of next week will carry us to victory.

We never before had the election of a President to a third term. That is an entirely new proposition. Undoubtedly it is a step in the direction of a monarchial government to elect a President for a third time.

Shall such a thing happen? It never occurred before—shall it occur now?

The question may as well be settled now. Are we have a republic or a monarchy?

What do the American people say to this question?

AMONG OUR EXCHANGES.

Grant and Tilden.

Washington Republican.—It will be Grant and Tilden. Make a note of it.

Tilden's Moves.

Canton Repository.—Mr. Tilden moves his blockheads in a masterly manner, but after all he may wake up in Cincinnati and find that they read: "13—15—14."

Every Thing Ready.

Chicago Times.—Mr. Hurlu J. Jewett's movement doesn't move, but every joint is greased and every wheel is in working order. It will be ready on a moment's notice.

A Sure Sign.

Philadelphia Times.—We are reminded that another Presidential campaign is coming on by the statement of all the organs at once that Tilden hasn't paid his income tax.

Thompson's Tubs.

Cleveland Herald.—We dont want to fight, but by jingo, if we do, Secretary Thompson had better tie up our war tubs with some new strings, because as they are now they are liable to come apart at a critical moment.

Cracked Its Autonomy.

Cincinnati Enquirer.—We begin to fear that the autonomy of our College of music is being cracked. This will never do. Let the autonomy be kept sacred, though the last fiddle be split into kindling-wood by the raging elements.

Must Have a Place.

Philadelphia Times.—One of the most solemn difficulties under the Empire is going to be to find a place somewhere near the size of Roscoe Conkling. The ordinary glitter and pomp of imperialism will not begin to answer his purpose.

Hayes For Grant's Third Term.

Philadelphia Press.—Information from Washington is to the effect that President Hayes has come out for a third term of Grant. The Grant people have been trying to keep the matter quiet, but it has finally leaked out, and they will have to struggle along with the burden as well as they can.

A Man of Stern Stuff.

Cincinnati Enquirer.—A number of Republican politicians are urging the nomination for President of a man of stern stuff—one who will take his seat in the event of a question about the result of the election. Mr. Hayes rested quietly at Columbus while the party fixed things for him at Washington, but there is evidently an impression that the 8x7 machinery was strained three years ago, and that it would not do to rely on it in another emergency.

Will Give Him a Chance to Speak.

New York Herald.—It is reported that the ex-President is coming home from Mexico. He returns by way of New Orleans, it seems, and he means to reach his house in Galena early in May—time enough, perhaps, to be chosen a delegate to the Illinois Republican Convention, which is to assemble on the 19th of May. If he should accept that position it would give him an opportunity to explain to his fellow citizens what he wants a third term of the Presidency for?

Better Get Ready.

Cincinnati Enquirer.—The President's assertion of the Monroe Doctrine has led the festive editors who do not coincide with him to point the finger of scorn to our dilapidated navy. It is intimated that the present condition of our maritime service would preclude the idea of coercing Great Britain into the President's views.—The question arises, Are we always to lie supinely on our backs, touching international questions, because we have no navy? Hadn't Mariner Thompson better get ready for an emergency?

The Place for Coroner Ludlow.

Detroit Free Press.—The coroners of New Jersey are the most conscientious officials of which that State can boast. A few days ago some men who were excavating at the Elysian Fields, Hoboken, unearthed a box which had evidently been buried for a score of years and which proved, on inspection, to contain some bones and a pair of boots. The conscientious coroner of the vicinity insisted on holding an inquest; and an equally conscientious jury rendered a verdict that the bones and boots belonged to some person unknown, who came to her death from causes unknown. Singularly enough the county authorities refuse to allow the coroner's account.

The Great Question.

New York Sun.—The great question is whether the early traditions of the republic—and that means republican institutions—shall be preserved or

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

"NOW you see it and now you don't"—the block puzzle.

CAPT. E. W. BOWEN, of Ypsilanti, is visiting at A. D. Lawrence's.

THE new drop curtain for the Opera House stage has arrived and been put up.

THE new organ in the Baptist church is being placed in position this week.

THE Butler railroad bonus at Detroit is making rather slow headway this week.

BEAR in mind the ladies' entertainment at the Opera House to-morrow evening and don't you forget it.

ADRIAN is pursuing a "still hunt" for the Toledo & Milwaukee railroad, and therein lies Tecumseh's danger.

OSCAR P. BILLS, of Ithaca, Mich., paid Tecumseh a flying visit last Thursday. He only remained one day.

THE public examinations in the schools will be held next week, that being the last week of the winter term.

A. W. SLAYTON is on the Canada Southern road caring walnut lumber. He has cared 100,000 feet of lumber this year.

MISS LEO MILLS and Miss Florence Mills, of Georgetown, Colorado, have been spending a few days with Mrs. A. Blackman, of this village.

A MEMORIAL service in commemoration of the late Rev. W. Sisson will be held at the Universalist church next Sunday morning.

ADRIAN is now having her turn of the railroad fever. The wise men of that city are already locating the line through the city and establishing the depots.

DAVID MCNAIR started for New York yesterday morning to buy clothing. The firm expect to have the largest stock ever displayed in Tecumseh, upon his return.

TRAMPS are now so scarce in Connecticut that, when they are wanted, they have to be advertised for. Making the gentle buck-saw an official instrument is what did it.

COL. W. C. FITZSIMMONS has issued a circular to the several captains of the companies composing the First regiment, requesting that all company orders be preserved and forwarded to the headquarters at Tecumseh.

W. W. COOK, of the Leslie Local, and his wife, were in town yesterday and paid the HERALD office a short call. They are here on a sad errand, to attend Mrs. Cook's fathers's funeral which takes place to-day in Raisin.

THE regular spring examination of Teachers for Tecumseh will be held in the Central School Building on Saturday, March 27th. The Raisin examination will be held on the same day in the School House in District No. 2.

THE HERALD Job Rooms have been turning out an extra lot of fine job printing during the past few days. Tecumseh business men will find it to their advantage to get their job printing done at home. Our facilities are such that we can execute work of a superior quality and at reasonable prices.

Adrian Times: The Tecumseh people who came to attend our railroad meeting last night, were disappointed to find that Mr. Latcha was only to to have an audience of thirteen.

Just so. While Tecumseh is taking a nap, Adrian is putting in some quiet but effective work, and unless we "stir our stumps" very soon, we shall wake up some fine morning and find that Adrian has secured this road.

LAVERN WHEELER has been getting up something new in the line of center table ornaments. It consists of putting a landscape scene or flower on the inner side of a large flat shell. He is now using common clam shells and the peculiar gloss of the shell shows through the painting, giving it a polished appearance. It makes a very neat and tasty table ornament for a cheap one.

Thousands of soldiers and heirs are entitled to Pensions with payment from date of discharge or death, if applied for before Jan. 1, 1880. Wound, accidental injury or disease entitles to a Pension. Bounty and back pay collected. Increase of Pension secured. This firm established in 1866. Address, enclosing stamp, EDSON BROS., U. S. Claim Attorneys, 711 G Street, Washington, D. C.

Hudson Gazette:—In digging amongst the "musty records" of the old Gazette office the other day, we came across the original MS. copy of the call for the first war meeting held in Hudson April 16th, 1861. The call is headed by Capt. Samuel DeGolyer, and contains the names of about 130 citizens. Of the number who signed this call, 30 have crossed to the other shore; and what is a little remarkable, the names of one-half of the deceased signers occur among the very first on the list.

BOB STRETCH has a new sidewalk and fence in front of his residence.

THE inquest at Blissfield has been adjourned till Monday next, March 23d.

THE council for the defense have asked for a new trial in the Geo. Bangs case.

MRS. JNO. N. GOTT, of Ann Arbor, is in Tecumseh for a few days visiting with her old friends.

THE "corkus" business has already commenced. We have one notice in the paper this week from Raisin.

A. B. COTTON has solved the block puzzle. If you don't believe it just read his solution on the first page.

A JOLLY time was spent by the Brown street Club last Saturday evening at the residence of Elijah Ames.

HAVING got the new railroad under way, Harry Lee has now gone to advertising. See his new card on the fourth page.

THE Hillsdales have a new four-oared shell, and will strive hard to retain the championship awarded to them at Saratoga.

THE regular annual donation for the benefit of Rev. H. Shepard will take place at the parsonage on Friday of next week, March 26th.

THE Tecumseh Railroad Committee are requested to meet at Wm. DeMott's office at seven o'clock this evening. Important business.

THE boss in the HERALD office has solved the puzzle. The trouble is he cannot remember how it was done and is unable to do it again.

THOSE who take the lead in pushing their business through the advertising columns of the newspapers, generally take the lead in everything else.

WM. VAN CAMP has sold his house and lot in this village to C. T. Cummins, who will take possession in a few days, as Mr. Van Camp is going to move with his family to Sedalia, Mo.

THE new organ is about set up in the Baptist Church. A grand organ concert is contemplated for next week. The date may be learned from the various pulpits on Sunday, and from hand bills.

MISS ADA GRAY had a fair house last Friday evening, and she fully maintained the standard of excellence which has made her a favorite with Tecumseh audiences. Ruth Tredgett is an admirable character for her.

A TRAMP had the delirium tremens, the other day. He said he saw angels, rats, mice, serpents, bees, almost everything in fact; but through all his delirious harangue he never admitted seeing a good sized wood pile and buck-saw.

TECUMSEH had a committee present at a railroad meeting in Adrian last Monday evening, but they had their labor for their pains. The real business of the meeting was transacted through a close communion committee of thirteen.

THE common council at its last meeting appointed Jas. Moir to the position of marshall and W. C. Jordan to that of street commissioner for the ensuing year. Good appointments, both of them, and we have no doubt they will give very general satisfaction.

LITTLE Minnie Musser who has been sick for the last six weeks met with a very pleasant surprise Monday afternoon in the form of her class in school dropping in upon her after school and presenting her with a neat Silver Napkin ring, it being her tenth birthday, for which they each have her heartfelt thanks.

MR. IMERSON has again moved into his hotel, the old Pioneer House, and will keep it himself this season. It will be known hereafter as the Imerson House, and he expects to make it as good a hotel in every respect as it was under his former management. The hotel has been open for guests since last Monday morning.

ON Tuesday morning of this week, Robert Redick of Clinton, got up out of bed and proceeded with only one garment on, to build the fire. As soon as he applied the match, the blaze flared out from the stove and set fire to his shirt, badly blistering his limbs and body, burning his beard and eyebrows, and setting fire to the carpet.

Following is the Program of the Tecumseh High School Lyceum for March 22, 1880.

MICHIGAN TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

The State Teachers' Institute for Lenawee Co., will be held at Tecumseh, commencing at 2 o'clock P. M., Monday, March 29, and closing Friday following. Prof. Z. C. Spencer, Tecumseh, Local committee and Conductor.

Gentlemen of eminent learning and of successful experience as educators have been engaged to give instruction in the various branches of common school studies, and in the theory and practice of teaching and governing schools. The State has wisely judged that the education of its youth ought not to be intrusted to those who have made no special preparations for the work. It has therefore provided for institutes in the several counties as the readiest and most efficient means of providing to the great body of the teachers of the State opportunities for fitting themselves for the duties of their calling. It is hoped that all teachers, and those proposing to become teachers will respond to this action of the state by availing themselves of the advantages offered by these Institutes. The morning and afternoon sessions will be devoted to the discussion of topics of particular interest to teachers, while the evening lectures will be of a popular character.

Expenses.—Tuition at this institute is absolutely free. Teachers will be furnished with board gratuitously or at reduced rates.

Full particulars in regard to board, etc., may be obtained upon application to the local committee.

The following lecturers and instructors have been appointed for the institute:

J. C. Jones, superintendent of schools, East Saginaw; Prof. E. G. Walker, Adrian; Rev. T. P. Prudden, Lansing; Z. S. Harrison, professor of vocal music, Kalamazoo; Prof. W. W. Wendell, Clinton; Dr. L. G. North, Tecumseh; Z. C. Spencer, superintendent of schools, Tecumseh. The semi-annual meeting of the county association will be held on Wednesday p. m., March 31.

All teachers will be furnished board at the Hotels at $1 per day, and board can be obtained at private houses at reduced rates.

13—15—14.

The Celebrated Block Puzzle—Can it be Solved?

The block puzzle has struck Tecumseh and people here have got it bad.—The puzzle is simply this: Fifteen little square blocks are placed in a square box about 3¾x3¾ inches. These blocks are numbered from 1 to 15 inclusive. This leaves in the box one empty space for a sixteenth block were one used. The following diagram illustrates:

1	2	3	4
5	6	7	8
9	10	11	12
13	14	15

The peculiar phase of this puzzle which has caused all the trouble is to transpose the 14 and 15 so it will read 13—15—14, by lifting the 15 into the 14 place and vice versa. Then the thing to do is to get the numbers into the regular order by moving them about in the box without lifting out. It will be comforting to our readers to learn that a distinguished mathematician has calculated that 1,307,674,368,000 moves can be made in the game, but it is unfortunate that he did not state whether the last move would bring things to a satisfactory termination.

When the blocks are placed in the box at random, it can sometimes be solved. It is easy enough to reduce the first three rows, but when the last row falls in this order—13, 15, 14,—it is said that a solution is impossible in horizontal rows, as the figures appear on the box cover. But even in this case it can be solved by changing the figures into perpendicular rows with 1 in the right hand upper corner and running the rows from right to left.

Can any one furnish a solution with the figures placed in horizontal rows, as they appear on the box cover, when the bottom line comes in this order—13, 15, 14? That is the question at issue. Now, don't all speak at once.

MR. WM. VAN CAMP has returned from his trip to Sedalia, Mo. While there he rented a store and he has made his arrangements already to remove his family to that city as soon as he can close out his business here. His brother-in-law, Jas. C. Wheeler will be a member of the firm in Sedalia, and they will keep a stock of Dry Goods and Crockery. We regret exceedingly to have "Van" leave Tecumseh, but wish him success and prosperity in his new location. Sedalia is a thriving city of 15,000 inhabitants, and there is a fine opportunity there for a live business firm to go into business.

THE political pot is beginning to bubble. Town meeting approacheth.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

PRESIDENTIAL GOSSIP.

The Isthmus Canal and the Ship Railway.

WASHINGTON, March 13, 1880.

Presidential gossip is still rife, but there has not been much excitement during the past week. The settled candidates on the Democratic side seem to be Mr. Tilden and Mr. Bayard; and on the Republican side Gen. Grant and Senator Blaine, with John Sherman a good third. The probabilities for nomination, on both sides, lie in about the order I have named the candidates.

You have no doubt received and examined the daily papers containing the full text of the President's message and accompanying documents on the Isthmian canal question, and have seen full accounts of the interviews of Count Ferdinand de Lesseps with the House Interoceanic Canal Committee. The President and House of Representatives seem to be of much the same mind on the Monroe doctrine. This canal subject has been one of absorbing interest here for the past few days. On Wednesday both the Frenchman and Captain Eads were before the committee, and each explained, as fully as time would allow, his peculiar plan. That of De Lesseps is pretty well understood by everybody now. His theory is that the waters of the Pacific and of the Carribean Sea are at the same height, and he proposes to cut a sea-level canal from ocean to ocean, boring an immense tunnel through the mountain range which forms the backbone of the Isthmus. He follows the route of the Panama railroad, a fact which, of course, puts all the influence of that powerful corporation against him and his project. Captain Eads' proposition is for the construction of a great ship railway, with a lifting dock at either end, which, he claims can be located in any place practicable for a canal, and in some places where a canal would be entirely impracticable and impossible. He says he has thoroughly investigated the subject, and that he can build a ship railway for from one-half to one-fourth the cost of a ship canal and complete it in one-half the time it would take to construct the water-way. He further claims that the railway would be capable of a much greater service to commerce than a canal would or could be, from the fact that it would save much time, as it would be able to take a ship across the Isthmus in one-third the time the water-way would occupy. In the latter the movement of a large vessel would necessarily be slow—not more than three or four miles an hour, or about the speed of an ordinary canal boat; while the railway Captain Eads is confident of attaining twelve miles an hour. He talks like a man of business, and manifests the utmost confidence in his theory and plan, and he was listened to with a respect which grows out of the success he has had with the Mississippi River jetties. The Captain and Count de Lesseps met in the Committee room, were introduced, and passed the usual compliments. They treated each other with the greatest deference and consideration. The route rights under which De Lesseps is working are a concession made by the Columbian government to Lieut. Wyse, of the French navy, some years ago, which have been by him conveyed to M. de Lesseps. In his remarks before the Committee, and in answer to questions, the Count conceded the right, justice and good policy of the United States to claim control of the work; in short, he stands confessed a pronounced Monroe doctrine man, and I predict that unless an association of American capitalists is at once formed to go to work on the Eads plan the Frenchman will build his canal. He has broken ground already, and there is little reason to question his ability to get all the money he wants for it in the markets of the world.

The frequent attempts of female schemers to blackmail our public men has produced a feeling among them that a more stringent law is necessary to punish such crimes. Accordingly, Mr. Covert, of New York, the other day introduced a bill on the subject, which was sent to the Judiciary Committee. It provides that "any person who shall orally or by written or printed communication, threaten to accuse another of any offense against the laws of the United States, or of any State, or of any act involving moral turpitude, with intent to thereby extort money, property, or other pecuniary benefit whatever, shall upon conviction, be sentenced to suffer imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not less than one nor more than ten years. The law ought to go a step further and decree adequate punishment to the shystering lawyers who are hand and glove with the "scarlet women" in getting up these annoying and disgraceful schemes.

Legislation is proceeding slowly, and unless more progress is made in the month to come than has been achieved in the last four weeks, Congress will hardly be able to adjourn by the middle of May, as some of the members are predicting.

WISCONSIN SOLDIERS.

A Grand Reunion of all surviving Wisconsin soldiers will be held at Milwaukee, Wis., commencing Monday, June 7, 1880, and continuing through the week.

The management is in charge of a joint committee of this Association, the Grand Army of the Republic, The Chamber of Commerce, Merchants' Association, and citizens of Milwaukee.

During the period, a separate reunion of every regiment and company in the war, from this State will also be held.

Regimental and company officers, who have not already done so are requested to issue a published call to the survivors of their respective commands for such a gathering at the time and place above given.

Wisconsin soldiers who have not before sent, should forward their names that the roster may be complete and in print by that time.

Comrades arriving at Milwaukee, will report promptly at the headquarters of the Wisconsin Reunion Association, be registered, directed to their respective company or regimental assembly places, aided in matters of subsistence, and generally advised as to the different programmes of the week.

Coming from every direction to meet the thousands here assembling, there will also be present, irrespective of party affiliations, the Nation's greatest Warriors, Statesmen and Orators, which, with a general encampment, and parade of all the organized military companies of the state, together with the usual and appropriate exercises of a soldier's reunion, such as "camp fires," "sham battles," cannot fail to make this occasion one of unparalleled interest and enjoyment, alike to the veterans and citizens of the Badger State.

Comrades of Wisconsin, this will be the first general reunion of our soldiers ever held in the state, and to many of us, the last.

Let the influence of each, be so exercised, that our ranks thinned and reduced though they are, shall on this occasion muster as "present for duty" their full strength, even as we hope in the great hereafter as we gather around the throne of the God of Battles,—none may be found missing or otherwise "accounted for."

THE FARMERS' PAGE.

HOW TO TREAT APPLE ORCHARDS.

Nearly as often as the months roll around comes this inquiry in some form or other. The question is asked in reference to young orchards, and in reference to old orchards; those on prairie soil, those on clay timbered land, or sandy land, and black alluvial.

A physician, when called on to prescribe remedies, wants to see the patient, and study all his symptoms before deciding what to do. There is fully as much chance for skill, broad, deep judgment, or good sound common sense in properly managing an apple orchard as there is in recommending remedies for sick people. It is quite risky for any one who does not know all the circumstances, to prescribe for an apple orchard. The best men may make mistakes, even when they have all the facts before them.

F. L. O., Blooming Prairie, Minnesota, is the last one to make inquiries as how to treat apple trees five years old and over. They have been thoroughly cultivated, and have made a fine growth. Potatoes and corn have been planted. The trees blossomed, but produce but little fruit. A hail storm appeared about May 13, and probably destroyed some fruit buds. The owner has been told to seed down his orchard to check its growth. Advice has been sought, and I have been asked to give it.

The climate of Minnesota is not known to us as the most genial for fruit. The owner of the orchard may not have planted the proper varieties. The trees may be too young to bear. He should not be discouraged if much fruit does not appear in five years.—On general principles I should not cultivate among the trees except in Spring (or very late in the Fall) until the end of July. His soil may lack some mineral element for the production of good fruit. It may lack drainage. The best and the surest thing I can advise is this: Join your State Horticultural Society, attend the meetings, read the reports, and you are in a fair way to success. But even then we shall often get puzzled. The writer knows of an orchard in Michigan, 20 years old, which has been thoroughly tile drained. The land is rather flat, and most of it is black loam, and very suitable for grass or Indian corn. The apple trees have suffered from cold winters. Experiments have been made in the management of the trees. For the past five years the soil about some of them—of several varieties—has been kept evenly and heavily mulched all over with no cultivation. Others have been well manured with barnyard manure, applied on the surface broadcast. The soil of others has been liberally dressed with wood ashes. The soil of others has been kept well cultivated every year till August. In some cases oats, or buckwheat has been sown at that date, and allowed to remain and fall down when killed in Autumn.

In no case has a single tree done what many trees of the same varieties have done in other parts of the State with ordinary care and attention.

To the best of my judgment, the land is too level; the soil too loamy for the production of fine apples in paying quantities. Apples can now be well grown in so many places that it is no longer profitable to attempt to grow them every where. The farmer must select spots where the soil, elevation, aspect and other conditions are most favorable. The day has passed when it is advisable to plant an apple orchard on any piece of land which will grow good corn and potatoes.

The best and most profitable apple orchards of New York and Michigan are planted on heavy land, well drained, or on gravelly land, or a mixture of the two, or on land with rich heavy subsoil. In some cases, the best results are reached on gravelly land with liberal cultivation and barnyard manure. In most cases, a good elevation is the best, unless near large deep bodies of water.

In the States named above, if the position is favorable, the soil should be such as will produce abundant crops of good Winter wheat. In such places it is quite safe to plant apple trees; take good care of them, and look for liberal returns, provided the right varieties are selected and the owner is not too far from market.

W. J. BEAL,
Michigan Agricultural College.

My good woman why are you out of sorts, never able to tell folks that you are well? Ten to one it's all caused in the first place by habitual constipation which has no doubt finally caused deranged Kidneys and Liver. The sure cure for Constipation, is the celebrated Kidney-Wort. It is also a specific remedy for all Kidney and Liver diseases. Thousands are cured by it every month. Try it at once.

A fond mother in Leadville speaks of her late son as having been born in Michigan but raised in Colorado. The vigilance committee raised him.

Kidney-Wort radically cures Biliousness, Piles and nervous diseases.

FARM HELP.

Where farms are large enough to afford it, and those who farm are engaged in a life pursuit, the best results have been found to follow from so managing as to have the help employed all the year round; and all the better if such help be married and can be comfortably domiciled in tenant houses on the ground. Advantage can thus be taken of every furth of good weather to get the work done at the proper moment, to the great benefit of the subsequent crop. Moreover a man regularly employed is likely to take more interest in his work than one who knows he is but temporary, and the employer has more chance to bear patiently with the man while both are learning one another's ways.

There is besides the absolute question of labor at this season, another which always troubles one, namely, that one of wages. The carpenter, for instance who gets in the city $2.50 to $3 per day, has to pay perhaps $16 or $18 per month for house-rent, while provisions of every kind have to be purchased, and often at high rates,—Even the smallest scrap of fuel has to be bought, and there is nothing but what costs hard cash to get it. A hand on a farm, especially if he is comfortably tenanted, has less rent, less expenses in provisions, and less demand on his wages in every way, and this should always enter into calculations as to the worth of services. Even when the single man is boarded in the family, it is still about the same. Sixteen dollars per months and board on a farm is better for the hand than $1.50 without any other privileges, in a city, as any single young man who has tried the difference can readily testify to.

It is not therefore a fair comparison between the actual cash wages of the city and the cash wages of the country. Nominally less, the result is generally greater, and this result sho'd be the basis of calculations. There is no doubt however that we lose much by transitory labor, and it will be wise for all who can to make such arrangements as will enable the laborer to be steadily employed the whole year.—Germantown Telegraph.

HOW TO MAKE DRAINS.

The distance between drains must be determined by the nature of the soil their depth and the amount of fall. A loose, porous soil will permit water to reach the drains for a long distance, while a tough, compact clay is almost impervious to water and requires the drains to be made much nearer. In a black, loose soil, drains at the depth of 4 feet are sufficient at a distance of ten rods apart, but if the land is hard pan or a stiff clay, to drain it thoroughly the distance apart sh'ld be from four to six rods.

But few persons in this part of the country realize the great advantge that deep drains have over shallow ones. In my extensive acquaintance in this and adjoining counties among drainers, I know of but few that drain to a depth averaging over one and a half to three feet. Farmers pay taxes on their land all the way down (and on wet lands it often amounts to rent) but they never get any agricultural benefit from it any deeper than they drain, but they do get the benefit of it that deep, even if it is eight feet; in fact an orchard or vineyard should not be drained less than that depth. The time is probably not far distant when such shallow drains will be taken up and put down again at a proper depth. Persons often say that it costs too much to drain so deep, when the fact is the cost is less. For instance, it would cost but very little more to dig two drains to the depth of four feet than it will to dig three to the depth of two and a half feet, and the two deep drains will drain fully as much land as the three shallow, and will drain it much better and save the expense of the third line of tile. But the depth of drains is not always a matter of choice, as very often the outlet is not sufficient, and I have very often noticed that persons are sometimes extremely contrary about giving their neighbors above them an outlet, and very often spend more time and money in lawing about it than would do the whole work, besides creating a bad feeling. In making an improvement of this kind, that is to last for all time to come, it is much better to secure a good outlet in the first place, if it does cost something more, especially if the land is flat and you have but little fall; but in all cases it is best to have a good outlet so that the water will fall from six to twelve inches when it leave the tile.—Drainage and Farm Journal.

Mr. Philip Remlinger, an old subscriber to our paper, and well-known in the whole surrounding country, informed us the other day that his wife, who for two weary years had suffered with Rheumatism in the shoulder, during which time she had been treated by several physicians without success, had been completely cured by a single bottle of St. Jacobs Oil.—Bucyrus, Ohio, Courier, Feb. 13, 1879.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMATION.

It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched out by the same unknown of its soothing and healing influence; Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external disease.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have not space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Republican caucus at Jackson's shop on Friday, April 2 nd, at 2 P. M., at which time candidates for township offices will be nominated, also six delegates to the County convention chosen.

We are to have a railroad meeting to-morrow, and from what we can hear we expect to see several subscriptions doubled, and a snug sum besides. There are quite a number of men in the township who say they would give if they were sure the road would be built, and others who have already given their notes who say they would give more rather than lose the road. One united effort would put Ridgeway out of the woods.

FRANKLIN.

Having consented to act "as scribe" for your valuable paper, perhaps it may not be out of place to respectfully request our citizens to assist me by communicating to, or addressing S. A. Beers, Tipton P. O., Box 101, any items of general interest, such as births, deaths, marriages, sickness, notices of meetings, religious or otherwise; socials, literary societies, sales of property, public or private; improvements, removals, visits by friends from abroad; in short everything except scandal, with which we have no desire or intention to meddle.

Our esteemed townsman, G. P. Perry, Esq., having sold his valuable farm to Mr. Brazilla Hurry, has leased the new dwelling house of Mr. Eli Knight, at Tipton, and we welcome them as valuable accessions to this community, and commend their wisdom on retiring from the arduous labors incident to the management of a large farm, in order that they may enjoy the fruits of their past labors in their declining years; and trust their future may be as peaceful as their past life has been useful.

Our band is in a flourishing condition having secured two additional members, and challenge comparison with any country band in Southern Michigan, and in fact will compare favorably with many of far greater pretensions. "Long may they wave."

The railroad project, we regret to say, has apparently ceased to "boom" in this vicinity; a fact, we think, to be seriously regretted, and certainly to one who has been conversant with the workings and advantages that accrue from competition in freights. It is surprising that shrewd men will not investigate the matter impartially in all its bearings, instead of fortifying themselves with arguments against giving in aid of what would, beyond question, prove a better investment, with quicker returns, than could be made in any other legitimate business. But the difficulty is, in our opinion, that the people in this community are not aware in how many ways, or to what extent, they would be benefited thereby.

The ladies of the Congregational church will give a maple sugar festival in the lecture room of the church, on Friday afternoon and evening next. All are cordially invited.

Thomas Lee, of the late firm of Beers & Lee, in the blacksmithing business, having disposed of his interest to Beers left town on Monday for Jackson, and perhaps further north, in search of his fortune. May success attend him.

Elbert Tripp left home for Cleveland Ohio, on Wednesday last, where he has procured a situation in an oil refinery.

Eugene C. Norcross, Superintendent of Schools for this township, has appointed a meeting at the Paragon school house for March 27th, for the purpose of examining candidates for teachers of our schools.

The donation visit at the M. E. parsonage, for the benefit of Rev. E. P. Pierce, on Friday last was largely attended. A pleasant time enjoyed and about $80 donated.

The "National" caucus will be held at Tuttle's hall on Wednesday, March 31st, at one o'clock, P. M.

The Republican caucus for the nomination of township officers and the election of delegates to the county convention, to be held in the city of Adrian, in May next, will be held in Tuttle's Hall on April 3d, 1880.

A polar wave has struck this township in the form of a petition from the Northern part thereof, praying the Township Board not to hold the coming township election in the new hall. The Board, in compliance therewith, have selected the old post office building, on the Ridge, commonly known as the "Ranche," that being the only other available building. Voters will please take notice.

The Republicans of this township will meet in caucus at the "Ranche," the Mills School House not being available, on Friday, April 2d, at two o'clock, P.M., for the purpose of selecting candidates for a township ticket, and electing delegates tributary to the National convention.

The Democratic Caucus for this township will be held at the old post office on Darling's corners, on Saturday of next week at ten o'clock in the forenoon.

THE RIDGEWAY SCHOOLS.

Report of their Condition by the School Superintendent.

RIDGEWAY, March 24, 1880.

EDITOR HERALD:—With your permission, I have concluded to make the following report through your columns concerning the present status of the common schools in the township of Ridgeway, thinking that such a report would be of interest and profit to those interested in the welfare of our schools. The report is made with reference to the winter terms which have now all closed.

The following diagram is here inserted for the purpose of locating the different school houses on their separate sections:

NOTE.—The numerals in order represent the sections. The stars represent the location of the school houses and the numeral near the star shows the number of the district.

At the beginning of the winter term cards of honor were offered those pupils who by diligent attendance during the term should neither be tardy nor absent, and also the publication of their names, which will be found appended to what may be said of each school.

The school in district No. 1 began under very favorable circumstances, with Rufus Raymond for teacher, he having taught the fall term, giving excellent satisfaction. This school is considerably the largest in the township, having on the register 65 names, 36 male attendance, 30 over the age of 12 years, and for the term of 71 days an average attendance of 56. It is certainly an unenviable task to take charge of a school of this size, especially where there are inconveniences that might be mentioned in this connection. However I feel glad to say that the school during the past term has been one of the most satisfactory to both patrons and pupils that has been taught in a number of years.

The following pupils were entitled to the card of honor:

Willie Allen, George Arner, Ernest Hamilton, Arthur Snedecor, Carl Snedecor, Fletcher Wood, Eddie Palmer, Jeddie Van Vleet, Lottie Arner, Nellie Freer, Della Freer, Jennie Holtz, Carrie Holtz, Flota Smith, Bertie Snedecor, Rosa Hendershot, Lula Rappleye, Flora Rappleye, Rena Young.

In district No. 2, a term of 60 days was taught by Thos. H. Temple. Pupils registered, 34; male attendance, 22; average, 31 7-12. This being the third winter term taught by Mr. Temple in this district, speaks well for him as a teacher. Those entitled to the card of honor were,

Montie Hoagland, Johnnie Underwood, Rachel Underwood, May Pocklington.

In district No. 3, Albert E. Palmer has been employed as teacher two winters in succession. At the close of the last term he was able to show the best register in the township, having 34 names registered, an average attendance of 32½, and the whole number of tardy marks during the term being but 17, there being 18 entitled to the card of honor. Mr. Palmer made a specialty of writing and spelling. Edgar J. Exelby gained a fine chrome by showing the greatest improvement in writing, and Miss Belle Barlow won a similar prize for the best spelling. Those entitled to cards of honor were Wesley Exelby, Albert Sutton, Burton Nichols, Charley Hindes, Dallas Smith, Ervin Palmer, Charley Dibble, Chauncey Dibble, Cyrus Underwood, Edward Palmer, Vernie Biggs, Ernest Palmer, Clarence Lowe, Alice Lester, Ruth Lester, Hattie Pattison, Jennie Underwood, Edith Lowe.

The school in district No. 4 has been taught for the past year very satisfactorily by Miss Amelia McNell, of Tecumseh. On account of the last term closing unexpectedly, it is impossible for me to give any definite report this week, but will endeavor to do so soon, especially should there be any pupils entitled to the card of honor.

E. S. Estes, teacher in district No. 5, taught the four months' winter term in a manner that pleased nearly all in the district, and was able to get some that attended much interested in study who had heretofore gone to school with but little profit. The register for the term also shows that good work has been done. Whole number attending was 19; average attendance, 17; and 9 entitled to card of honor, as follows:

Merritt Cox, Lemuel J. Palmer, Freddie Palmer, Tommie Florence, Montie Florence, Adelbert Beevers, Minnie Montgomery, Ida Pocklington, Eva Pocklington.

In district No. 6, the number of pupils registered 29; average attendance, 24; male attendance, 15; over the age of 12 years, 10; teacher, Lyman Sweet. Those entitled to card of honor were Eugene Zeluff and Vernie Gripton.

It is very evident that Miss Stella Jones, of Tecumseh, did good work in district No. 7. The number of pupils enrolled were 25; 10 over the age of 12 years. I am unable to give the average attendance, but am quite positive it compared well with the other schools in the township. The card of honor was awarded Herman Schwab, Eddie Clark, Thresia Spielman, Myra Bowerman and Celia Schwab.

District No. 9 is a new one, formed on the prairie about two years ago, and the school has been held in a dwelling house. The contract is now let for the building of a school house 24x32, which is to be completed in time to use this summer. There is considerable enterprise in this district which will soon make it average well with several others in the township. The register this winter showed, enrolled, 11; over the age of 12 years, 3; average attendance about 6. Teacher, Miss Minnie Hooper, of Flat Rock. The attendance this summer will be nearly doubled, as several families have moved into the district this spring.

In conclusion, I would like to urge the school officers in every district with the exception of Nos. 3 and 9, to earnestly consider the propriety of erecting new school buildings, with patent seats and modern fixtures. All of the present buildings, with the above exceptions, have poor conveniences for both teacher and pupils, compared with the modern school house. There is but one good blackboard in the whole lot, and at least four or five are not in a condition to be of any use. A good blackboard is needed more than anything else inside the school room and without which it is very incomplete. I shall venture to call attention to the fact that every school room ought to be supplied with a good dictionary—not the large, heavy unabridged, but one of medium size, costing about $6, and one which can be easily handled by the pupils. This is a matter which ought to be acted upon at the next school meeting in those districts where no dictionary has been furnished. There are many other suggestions that might be made, but as this is the first published report of the kind that has been made in the township since the township superintendency has been instituted, it will probably be received as sufficient for a beginning. Other suggestions will be left for my successor.

G. P. WARING,
Township Superintendent.

LAST Monday evening a team of John Zeluff's, hitched near the grain warehouse at the depot, took fright at the noise made by the car there used for elevating the grain. The team broke loose and started up Railroad street. They were under good headway when they ran against the lamp post on the corner opposite Hayden's warehouse. The lamp was shattered to pieces and still the team pursued its course up to Cummins' carriage factory, where they were stopped, and the owner put in appearance.

J. L. MCCLOUD, a former resident of Tecumseh, has been in town a few days. He is now Secretary of the Northwestern Mutual Benefit Association of Detroit, and his visit here was upon business connected with that company.

TRUST

The world is vast and we are small,
We are as weak and it as strong,
Onward it goes nor cares at all
For us, our silence or our song,
Our tears—our joy or our festival.

We tremble as we feel its way
Beneath our feet, as on we pass,
But like a doll which children play
God spins it through the fair blue sky.
We are his own! why should we care?

—Susan Coolidge.

THE SONG OF THE PEAR TREE.

From the French of Paul Ferai.

There stood at the end of the village a large pear tree; in the spring time a mass of beautiful flowers. The house of the farmer was on the side of the road; it had a portal of stone, similar to that of a chateau. The daughter of the farmer was called Perrine.

We were good friends. Since when? Ah! who knows?—for I am ignorant.

II.

She was sixteen. What a dear little heart beat under her blue bodice, embroidered with black velvet! What roses on her cheek! How brilliant her laughing eyes, when from her window she sang to me! Sang to me that it was time for our meeting under the pear tree, to talk of our marriage.

III.

Under the pear tree there was green grass. In no other place could you find grass so sweet and fine to sigh on, and repeat those words that are said a hundred times, yet are always new.

She laughed with all her heart.—"Perrine, my Perrine, when will you marry me?"

IV.

Everything about her laughed—her caressing hair, which played with the wind, her round waist, the little red shoe which peeped forth from its hiding place, her hands which lowered the pendant branches of hawthorn to inhale the perfume of flowers, her pure and joyous face, her pearl-like teeth between her red lips.

Ah! how I loved her!

V.

When the conscription came I burned a wax taper to the Virgin. The thought of leaving Perrine, of going far away from her, perchance never to return, stilled my heart. Praise be to Ste. Marie! I drew the highest number. But Jean, my foster brother, fell a victim to fate.

I found him weeping, saying "My mother! my poor mother!"

VI.

"Console thyself, Jean; I am an orphan." He would not believe me when I said to him, "I will go for thee." Perrine came under the pear tree; her eyes were wet; never before had I seen her weep; but her tears were more lovely than her smiles.

She gave me her cheek to kiss, and whispered to me softly, "Go, my Pierre; I will wait for you."

VII.

Right, left, right, left, drums beating! Forward, march! Thus we went to Wagram. Pierre be firm! There is no enemy! A line of fire is visible—five hundred cannon speak at the same time; smoke oppresses the lungs, and the slip on the blood-stained ground. I was afraid, and thought of the past.

VIII.

The past was France, the village and the pear tree, on which the flowers were now fruit. I shut my eyes, and saw Perrine praying for me.—Praise be to God! I am brave again! Forward, march! right, left! Fire! Charge bayonets! Ah, ah! how well he does the conscript!

"Young man, what is thy name?"

"Sire, I am called Pierre."

"Pierre, I make you a lieutenant."

IX.

Perrine, oh, my Perrine! Lieutenant! It is a feast-day of battles! The rise in the army is but to put one foot before the other. Right, left.

"Is it still thou, Pierre?"

"Yes, your majesty."

"Take an epaulette."

There were plenty on the shoulders of the dead.

X.

"Sire, I thank you!" And now forward to Moscow—but not further; through great plains of snow is a route marked by corpses; here the river, there the enemy—on both sides death!

"Who placed in line the first bridge?"

"I, Sire."

"Away thou, Captain."

He gave me the cross of a chevalier.

XI.

Perrine, my Perrine, you will be proud of me. The campaign is finished; I have my leave. Sound the chimes, the bells for our marriage! The road is long, but hope travels fast. Already I see the country; behind that mountain is the valley. I recognize the bell ringer. He is ringing.

XII.

He is ringing. But the pear tree. The month of flowers is here, but I see not the fragrant mass. Before, it was visible from afar. They had cut down the tree of our young tenderness! It had its flowers, its flowers so gay, but its branches were strewn about the grass.

XIII.

"Why do you ring, Mathieu?"

"For a wedding, Captain."

Mathieu no longer remembers me.

A wedding! He spoke truly. The couple came down the steps of the church. The bride was Perrine—my Perrine, laughing, and more lovely than ever.

Jean, my brother, was the bridegroom.

Around me the good people said, "They love each other."

"But Pierre?" I asked.

"What Pierre?" they answered me. They had forgotten.

XIV.

I threw myself on my knees in the church. I prayed for Perrine and prayed for Jean—all that I had loved. The mass finished, I picked up a flower from the pear tree, a poor, dead flower, and retraced my route without looking behind me.

Praise be to God! they love each other; they will be happy.

XV.

"You have returned, Pierre?"

"Yes, Sire."

"You are twenty-two years of age; you are a commander and a chevalier. If you wish, I will give you as your wife a countess of my court."

Pierre pulled from his breast the dead flower picked from the felled pear tree.

"Sire, my heart is like that. I wish a post in the advance guard that I may die bravely."

XVI.

He had a position in the advance guard. Praise be to God! At the end of the village there is a tomb of a colonel, who died at twenty-two years, on a day of victory. It is the place where stood the pear tree; and it is not a widow who comes there to weep and to pray.

Wonderful Cures,

Rev. F. W. Buchholz, Waseca, Minn. used the St. Jacobs Oil in the case of a lady of his congregation who had been bed-ridden with Rheumatism for seventeen years. She used the St. Jacobs Oil for three days, and was able to leave her bed.

Mr. R. Schaefer, No. 31 Brown St., Alleghany City, Pa., had the Rheumatism for eight years, and had used every known medicine without relief. A single bottle of St. Jacobs Oil cured him.

Gustav A. Heitman, Esq., editor of Pittsburgh Daily Republican, suffered with Rheumatism for two years, and lay many a night unable to sleep on account of terrible pains. Two bottles of St. Jacobs Oil cured him.

Mr. F. Wilke, Lafayette, Ind., reports a case where a man suffered so badly with Rheumatism that he could not move. His legs were swollen, and he had the most terrible pains. Twelve hours after the first application of the St. Jacobs Oil the pains were gone and the swelling had disappeared.

Mr. Henry Schaefer, Millersburg, Ohio, was cured of Rheumatism in hips.

Mr. E. R. Witt, Cleveland, Ohio, Rheumatism in the leg. Cured after three applications.

Mr. Henry Lear, Patriot, Ohio, had such pain in his shoulder that he could not move. St. Jacobs Oil cured him after a few applications.

Mrs. Vrena Gugelmann, aged fifty-nine years, living in Rochester, N. Y., Rheumatism in legs; could not walk. Used bottle of St. Jacobs Oil and felt, as she asserts, like new-born.

Christian Hanni, Esq., Youngstown, Ohio, is full of joy over the wonderful cure of his wife by St. Jacobs Oil. For twelve long years she had suffered with Neuralgia in the head, and often had the most terrible pains. Half a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil cured her entirely.

Mr. Wm. Reinhardt, Elmore, Wis., reports as follows: St. Jacobs Oil is really a wonderful remedy, for I could mention dozens of cases where it has proved its magical influence. One case in particular I will state: I know a man who has suffered with Rheumatism for the last twenty-four years, and of late could hardly move around. After using a few bottles of St. Jacobs Oil he was entirely cured.

B. Seim, Esq., South Adams, Mass., writes: Allow me to inform you how much good St. Jacobs Oil has done in this neighborhood. A woman had the Rheumatism so badly that she could not even attend to her wash. Three applications of St. Jacobs Oil cured her. Her joy seemed to have no bounds.

"I Am Played Out"

Is a common complaint. If you feel so, get a package of Kidney-Wort and take it and you will at once feel its tonic power. It renews the healthy action of the Kidneys, Bowels and Liver, and thus restores the natural life and strength to the weary body. Get a box and use it at once.

It is undoubtedly true, that men who are always idle and waiting for a friend to assist them in securing a lucrative business never succeed.

Thus exclaimed an old gentleman recovering from a severe attack of the bronchial tubes. "'Sellers' Cough Syrup' cured me." Price 25c.

SANITARY SCIENCE.

THE NEW MOVEMENT.

First Letter in the Series on Sanitary Science.

LANSING, March 15, 1880.

CHARLES BURRIDGE:—

My Dear Sir—It was with great pleasure that I received your letter in which you state that the committee on public health of the village of Tecumseh have made arrangements for publishing in your local paper, a series of short articles on the sanitary condition and requirements of your village; that your leading citizens, clergymen, lawyers, merchants and doctors, have volunteered to contribute such articles; and asking me to write an introductory article. I cheerfully comply with your request, and contribute what I can to so good a work.

I hail this movement as one full of promise of good to your village, and one that speaks well for the intelligence and public spirit of Tecumseh. There are communities which require the sharp scourge of some sweeping pestilence or wasting epidemic before they will bestir themselves to improve their sanitary condition. But when a village whose position and surroundings are all conducive to good health, in absence of any unusual sickness or alarm, quietly and voluntarily turns its attention to making its natural good condition better and safer still by a careful study of its sanitary condition, it shows a wise forethought on the part of such people, and the future of such a place is bright with promise of good. I feel proud of Tecumseh which has taken the lead in this good work, and feel confident that other places will follow her example.

At first sight it would seem that in a village without pavement, sewers and water-works, without vast manufacturing establishments with their poisonous gases and accumulations of effete products, without the crowding and concentration incident to a great city, where every one has elbow room and breathing space, the sanitary problems would be very simple. It is country life without its solitude—rural homes brought into social juxtaposition. But country life does not imply sanitary license. There are many things that cause sickness as certainly in the country as in the city. The poisoned well and the foul cellar do not require a city charter to ply their trade of death. City, village and country alike must solve certain problems common to them all, or pay the penalty. It is the old fable of the sphinx translated into modern life; we must destroy the sphinx by guessing her riddle, or failing this, be slain by her.

The village is relieved of many evils inherent in the city, but at the same time cannot afford some of the advantages which the city may command. The sewer system with its evident advantages, but concealed dangers, is not to be expected in the village; nor water-works with its abundant flow of pure water—a literal "river of life" to every large city. The village can not afford to pay for the scientific attainments and professional skill of the sanitary engineer who shall devote his entire time to the study of the sanitary condition; nor for the organized force by which all foul and dangerous materials are quietly, immediately and effectually removed to some place of safety. In the village each householder must to a large extent be his own health-officer and scavenger combined. Without the hearty co-operation of the citizens, a good sanitary condition is more difficult to secure in a village than in a city. In the village the walls of safety must be built as the walls of Jerusalem were rebuilt in times of old, "every one over against his house." It is not difficult to secure the co-operation of citizens when they know what needs to be done and how to do it.

Pure air, pure water and unpolluted soil are three essential conditions of health—the tripod of sanitary existence. Pure air is made impure by use and then can only be purified by removal or ventilation; need of it in the home, the school, church, etc. Test the need of ventilation by going into the room from the fresh air outdoors and snuff the air of the room to see if it is as fresh and invigorating. Test your school-rooms, your bedrooms, etc., by this means after several hours of use.

Pure water is made impure by infiltration of foul matter, such as manural and excremental matter, or decaying animal or vegetable matter. Apply sugar test by dissolving a teaspoonful of loaf sugar in a quart of water in a large bottle and leaving in a warm place for thirty-six hours, and see if it remains clear and bright. Cesspools, privy vaults, stables, pig sties, hen coops, etc., may drain into the well and cause pollution and dangerous sickness.
